1696 Caserns: PHILLIPS, World of Words. 1743-7 firing the caserns and granaries, where the oats and other magazines lay: TINDAL, Contin. Rapin, Vol. I. p. 326/2 (1751). 1797 Casern: Encyc. Brit. 1823 He must go home with us to our caserne...there is no safety for him out of our bounds: SCOTT, Quent. Dur., ch. vi. p. 101 (1886). 1887 Paris is pretty well garrisoned, and the caserns in the vicinity of the capital are always occupied: J. F. COOPER, Europe, Vol. I. p. 248.

cash, sb.: Eng. fr. Port. caixa, casse, cas (perhaps confused with Eng. fr. Fr. cash): name given to small money of S. India up to 1818 (see quotations from Lockyer and Grose); also to small money of China and the Malay Islands, made of an alloy of copper and lead, with a hole in the middle for stringing them on cords. The word cash (Chinese tsien) as applied to Chinese money = 1000 of the tael (q.v.), or Chinese ounce of silver, so that about thirty cash = a penny.

1598 200 Caixas is a Sata, and 5 Satas are 1000 Caixas, which is as much as a Crusado Portingale money, or 3 Keysars guilders, Netherlandish money: Tr. J. Van Linschoten's Voy., Bk. I. Vol. I. p. 113 (1885). 1600 Those [coins] of Lead are called Casas: whereof a thousand six hundred make one Mar: J. DAVIS, in Purchas's Pilgrimage, Vol. I. Bk. III. p. 117. 1622 We paid for our diet at Ishebe 3 ta, and to the servants 200 cash: R. COCKS, Diary, Vol. II. p. 77 (1883). 1625 Four hundred Cashes make a Coupon, Four Coupons are one Mar. Flue Masses make four shillings sterling: PURCHAS, Pilgrimage, Vol. I. Bk. III. p. 123. — for when Cashis were cheape, and Rials deare, wee could not vent a piece of stuffe at halfe the value we did at our first coming: ib., p. 173. — the King hath no Coin of his owne, but what cometh from China, which is called Cashes, and is made of the dross of Lead, it is round and thin, with holes to string them on, a thousand Cashes vpon a string, called a Pecoo, which is of diuers values, according as Cashes rise or fall, wherewith they know how to make their accounts, which is as followeth: ten Pecoos is a Laxsau, ten Laxsaus is a Cattee, ten Cattees is an Vta, ten Vtas is a Bahar: ib., Bk. IV. p. 391. 1662 a string of two hundred Casas, called Sata, is worth about three farthings sterling, and five Satas tyed together make a Sapocow: J. DAVIES, Tr. Mandello, Bk. II. p. 118 (1669). 1711 Doodos and Cash are Copper Coins, eight of the former make one Fanham, and ten of the latter one Dodo: C. LOCKYER, Trade in India, 8. [Yule] 1788 The Casas are of two kinds, great and small: the small are those we have been speaking of; three hundred thousand whereof, are equal to fifty-six livres five sols, Dutch money. The large are old Casas; six thousand whereof are equal to the piece of eight, or four shillings sixpence sterling. These are nearly the same with the cashes of China, and the cassies of Japan: CHAMBERS, Cycl., s.v. Casas. abt. 1780-80 At Madras and other parts of the coast of Coromandel, 80 cashes make a fanam, or 3d. sterling; and 36 fanams a silver pagoda, or 7s. 8d. sterling: GROSE, Voyage, I. 282 (1779). [Yule] 1790 I think it very possible that every Cash of that ill-judged saving may cost the Company a crore of rupees: LORD CORNWALLIS, in Madras Courier, Sept. 22, 1791. [ib.] 1878 strings of cash—very 'petty cash' indeed—to buy prayers with of the priest: J. PAVIN, By Proxy, Vol. I. ch. III. p. 26. — every thousand cash paid: ib., p. 33.

Resid. in Spain*, p. 86. 1832 we heard the notes of a guitar, and the click of castanets: W. IRVING, Alhambra, p. 25. 1845 let all...listen to the song, the guitar, the castanet: FORD, Handbk. Spain, Pt. I. p. 77. — the sound of the castanet wakens the most listless: ib., p. 187.

[The Sp. castañeta = 'cracking or snapping of the fingers', which accompanies some Spanish dances. The word is derived from castaña (It. castagna) = 'chestnut', the sound being compared to the cracking of chestnuts on the fire.]

cast(e)*, sb.: Eng. fr. Port. casta, = 'race', 'family': a tribe, clan, family. In India the term also comes to denote special occupation and social status according to the institutions of Brahminism. The four principal Brahmin castes are, the Brahmins or religious order, the Kshetriyas or military order, the Vaiyas or merchants, and the Sudras or artisan and laboring classes. Hence, the term is applied by extension of meaning to social position generally, to the breed of domestic animals, and finally, to status of any kind.

1. an Oriental family, clan, or tribe.

1625 about which part lived the Cassa or Caste of Albrid Absodock: PURCHAS, Pilgrims, Vol. II. Bk. vi. p. 861. 1662 the same Caste, or Family: J. DAVIES, Tr. Mandelsto, Bk. catachrēsis, sb.: Lat. fr. Gk. κατάχρησις.

1. a rhetorical figure by which a word is used in a sense which does not properly attach to it.

1553 Abusion, called of the Grecians Catachresis, is when for a proper certaine woordes we use that which is most nighe unto it: T. WILSON, Art of Rhet., p. 92. 1589 Catachresis, or the Figure of abuse: PUTTENHAM, Eng. Poet., III. xvi (f.). p. 190 (1869). 1603 take these termes as spoken metaphorically or by the figure κατάχρησις: HOLLAND, Tr. Plut. Mor., p. 33. 1696 PHILLIPS, World of Words. 1887 Herr Schlapp dealt very fully with the origins of Shakespeare's metaphor...his use of catachresis or mixed metaphor: Athenaeum, Apr. 30, p. 579/2.

2. an instance of the perversion of terms according to the figure described above.

1603 it ministreth some rhetorical figures, catachreses and metaphrases, songs, musical measures and numbers: HOLLAND, Tr. Plut. Mor., p. 984. 1603 that this title of Mathematici, is by a Catachresis, abusive used in the ciuill law: C. HAYDON, Def. Judic. Astrol., p. 330. 1609 When we call pipes Vocal, it is a translated word and a Catachresis: J. DOULAND, Tr. Ornith. Microsc., p. 6. 1684—6 It is a catachresis signifying the very great destruction of their enemies: J. TRAPP, Comm., Vol. IV. p. 436/1 (1867). 1671 and by the way how do'st like that Metaphor or rather Catachresis: SHADWELL, Humorists, III. p. 37. 1674 Catachreses and Hyperboles: DRYDEN, State Innoc., Pref., Wks., Vol. I. p. 591 (1701). 1727 nothing so much conduces to the Bathos, as the CATACHRESIS. A Master of this will say, Mow the Beard, Shave the Grass, Pin the Plank, Nail my Sleeve: PORR, Art of Sinking, ch. x. Wks., Vol. VI. p. 191 (1757).

catacomb ($\angle = \angle$), sb.: Eng. fr. It. catacomba: underground burial-places near Rome, supposed to have been used as hiding-places by the early Christians; hence, gen. any connected series of underground burial-places.

1690 But without the City [of Naples] near the Church and Hospital of St. Gennaro, are the Noble Catacombs: BURNET, Lett. Switzerland, &c., IV. p. 201 (1686). 1696 Catacombs, the Tombs of the Martyrs are so call'd in Italy, which the People go to visit out of Devotion: PHILLIPS, World of Words. 1704 Amphitheatres, triumphal arches, baths, grottoes, catacombs, rotundas: ADDISON, Wks., Vol. I. p. 434 (Bohn, 1854). 1797 The method of preserving the dead in catacombs seems to have been common to a number of the ancient nations: Encyc. Brit., s.v.

catadūpa, sb.: Lat. fr. Gk. Κατάδουποι (fem. pl.): the Cataracts of the Nile. Also, metaph. Anglicised as catadupe.

1596 Sien of my science in the catadupe of my knowledge, I nourish the crocodile of thy conceit: Wit's Miserie. [Nares] 1601 the water that he [Nile] beareth, hasteneth to a place of the Ethiopsians called Catadupi, where in the last fall amongst the rocks that stand in his way, hee is supposed not to runne, but to rush downe with a mightie noise: HOLLAND, Tr. Plin. N. H., Bk. 5, ch. 9, Vol. I. p. 97. 1612 and in the fall, the water maketh an exceeding great noise, like vnto that Catadupa in Ethiopia, where the fall of Nilus maketh such a noise, that the people are made deafe therewith that dwell neere it: W. BIDDULPH, in T. Lavender's Travels of Four Englishmen, p. 30. 1640 no more than Egypt can Nile Catadupa bear: H. MORE, Psych., III. III. 17, p. 159 (1647). 1696 Catadupe, (Greek) the same as Cataract in the first signification, viz. a fall of Waters, with a great noise from on high: PHILLIPS, World of Words.

catadupe ($\angle = \angle$), sb.: Eng. fr. Late Lat. catadūpus, pl. catadūpi: one living near the Cataracts of the Nile.

1607 As I remember, the Egyptian catadupes never heard the roaring of the fall of Nilus, because the noise was so familiar unto them: BREWER, Lingua, III. sig. e 8^{vo} (1657). [C. E. D.] bef. 1658 Like the Catadupi at the Fall of Nile [sic]: J. CLEVELAND, Wks., p. 241 (1687).

catalfalco, sb.: It., 'stage', 'scaffold', 'hearse': a decorative structure used in funeral solemnities, a richly decorated hearse. Anglicised by Evelyn, 1643, as catafalque, perhaps through Fr. catafalque.

1641 in the middle of it [the chapel] was the hearse, or catalfalco, of the late Archduchess: EVELYN, Diary, Vol. I. p. 34 (1850). 1645 In this church was erected a most stately Catalfalco...for the death of the Queen of Spain: ib., p. 168. 1680 AUBREY, Lives of Eminent Men (1813). [T. L. K. Oliphant] 1753 CASTRUM DOLORIS, in middle-age writers, denotes a catalfalco, or a lofty tomb of state: CHAMBERS, Cycl., Suppl.

catafalque, sb.: Fr., or Eng. fr. Fr. ($\angle = \angle$). See catalfalco. Also, metaph.

1643 In the nave of the church lies the catafalque, or hearse, of Louis XIII.: EVELYN, Diary, Vol. I. p. 42 (1850). 1774 refusing to assist at the catafalque of the late King: HOR. WALPOLE, Letters, Vol. VI. p. 102 (1857). 1835 each corpse was brought up the church and placed on a great catafalque in the middle of the dome: H. GREVILLE, Diary, p. 66. bef. 1863 the catafalque... is really a noble and imposing-looking edifice, with tall pillars supporting a grand dome: THACKERAY, Sec. Fun. Napoleon, p. 341 (1879). 1878 The black and yellow catafalque known as the 'best bed': GEO. ELIOT, Dan. Deronda, Bk. I. ch. III. p. 17. 1883 The catafalque stands in front of the altar: Standard, Sept. 1, p. 5/6. 1884 I saw the catafalque of curls...that the hair-dresser piled on her head: Tr. Galdos' Trafalgar, p. 104.

catagrapha, sb. pl.: Gk. κατάγραφα, properly neut. of adj. κατάγραφος, = 'drawn in profile'. See quotation. The Anglicised catagraph, = 'a drawing in outline', is probably fr. Gk. sb. κατάγραφῆ, = 'a delineation'.

1638 Cimon Cleonatus was the first that found out Catagrapha, that is, oblique or travers images, varying the countenances of men, by making them not only to looke backe, but up and downe also: JUNIUS, Anc. Painting, Bk. III. ch. IV. p. 290.

Cataian, adj. to Late Lat. Cataia, = 'Cathay' or 'China'. Used as sb. in 16, 17 cc., the word meant either a liar or a thief.

1598 I will not believe such a Cataian, though the priest o' the town commended him for a true man: SHAKS., Merry Wives, II. 1, 148. 1604 I'll make a wild Cataian of forty such: Honest W., in Old Plays, III. 435 [Nares] 1649 Hang him, bold Cataian, he indites finely: DAVENANT, Love & Honour (ib.) catalēpsis, sb.: Late Lat. fr. Gk. κατάληψις, = 'seizure', a state of real or apparent unconsciousness into which hysterical subjects may fall. Generally Anglicised as catalepsy.

1671 Catalepis...is a sudden detention or benumbing both of Mind and Body: SALMON, Syn. Med., I. lii. 126. 1706 KERSEY. bef. 1735 a disease called a catalepis: ARBUTHNOT. [T.]

catalexia, sb.: Late Lat. fr. Gk. κατάληξις, = 'termination': the absence of part of the last foot of a verse, gen. the ending of a verse with a long syllable instead of a complete foot.

1830 Since the Cretic foot is by itself a catalectic order, Cretic verses are for the most part terminated by that same foot, and have no other catalexia: J. SEAGER, Tr. Hermann's Metres, Bk. II. ch. XIX. p. 46.

catalogue ($\angle = \angle$), sb.: Eng. fr. Fr. catalogue: a list, esp. a systematic list, often arranged in alphabetical order, as the catalogue of a library, a list made for a special purpose (as an auctioneer's catalogue of a sale); not now applied to persons in England, as it still is in Scotland and America.

1576 his name is not read in all the Catalogue of the Saxons: LAMBARDE, Peramb. Kent, p. 354. 1586 The whole...frame of this earth seemeth blundered and confounded with the innumerable Catalogues of Interpreters: FERNE, Blas. Gentrie, Ded. 1589 in euerie wrinkle was a catalogue of woes: R. GREENE, Menaphon, p. 28 (1880). 1598 The Catalog of bookes that I haue read through: FLORIO, sig. b 1^{ro}. bef. 1603 a great Christian Doctor, who hath placed Seneca in the Catalogue of Saints: NORTH, (Lives of Epamin. &c., added to) Plut., p. 1225 (1612). 1605 the count-lesse catalogue of those I haue cured: B. JONSON, Volp., II. 2, Wks., p. 469 (1616). 1611 I could then haue look'd on him, without the help of Admiration, though the Catalogue of his Endowments had bin tabled by his side, and I to peruse him by Items: SHAKS., Cymb., I. 4, 5. 1620 the Catalogue of the Divine Books: BRENT, Tr. Soave's Hist. Connc. Trent, Bk. II. p. 145 (1676). 1657 Other innumerable things there were, printed in his Catalogue by Mr. Ashmole: EVELYN, Diary, Vol. I. p. 340 (1872). 1665 ranked in the catalogue of the Heathen Gods: SIR TH. HERBERT, Trav., p. 107 (1677). 1675 marking them [books] in the Bodleian Catalogue...beyond my merit or ambition: EVELYN, Corresp., Vol. III. p. 249 (1872). 1694 They are printing catalogues of all y^e manuscripts in all y^e publick and all y^e private libraries in England: Hutton Corresp., Vol. II. p. 303 (1878). 1712 a long catalogue of those virtues and good qualities he expects to find in the person of a friend: Spectator, No. 385, May 29, Vol. IV. p. 296 (1826). 1776 he was inserted in the catalogue of Athenian divinities: R. CHANDLER, Trav. Greece, p. 59. 1785 station'd there | As duly as the Langford of the show, | With glass at eye, and catalogue in hand: COWPER, Task, VI. Poems, Vol. II. p. 180 (1808).

catalogue raisonné, phr.: Fr., 'analytical catalogue': a catalogue based on analysis, a catalogue arranged and executed on scientific principles, giving a full description of each item registered.

1803 A catalogue raisonnée, if executed with judgment and impartiality, would be a very useful appendage to every work: Edin. Rev., Vol. 3, p. 79. 1806 While on a visit, without a servant—counting out your linen (shaking piece by piece) for the wash, and drawing up, at intervals, a catalogue raisonnée of the litter: BRERESFORD, Miseries, Vol. I. p. 108 (5th Ed.). 1816 the ingenious Mr. Tassie has made a collection amounting to 160000 gems of which a catalogue raisonnée was published 1792: J. DALLAWAY, Of Stat. & Sculpt., p. 299. 1828 his poem on Zoology, considered with reference to the subject, is little more than a catalogue raisonné: Harrobian, p. 82. 1843 Even after he has learned as much as people usually do learn from others, will the notions of things contained in his individual mind afford as sufficient a basis for a catalogue raisonné as the notions are in the minds of all mankind: J. S. MILL, System of Logic, Vol. I. p. 22 (1856). 1888 A specially useful feature will be a catalogue raisonné, descriptive of all the different sets of slides now on sale: Academy, Nov. 3, p. 288/3.

1754 The Catalpa Tree...Bignonia Urucell... This Tree was unknown to the inhabited parts of Carolina, till I brought the seeds from the remoter parts of the country: CATESBY, Nat. Hist. Carolina, Vol. 1. p. 49. 1767 deciduous ornamental trees... such as poplar, almond, catalpa, tulip tree: J. ABERCROMBIE, Ev. Man own Gardener, p. 180 (1803). 1797 The catalpa...deserves a place in all curious shrubberies: Encyc. Brit., s.v. Bignonia.

catalysis (= $\angle = \angle$), sb.: Gk. κατάλυσις, = 'dissolution' (esp. of a government).

1. a rapid decay, a dissolution, a bringing to an end.

1655-6 I perceive by your symptoms, how the spirits of pious men are affected in this sad catalysis: EVELYN, Corresp., Vol. III. p. 69 (1879). bef. 1667 While they were in thoughts of heart concerning it, the sad catalysis did come, and swept away eleven hundred thousand of the nation: JER. TAYLOR, [L.] 1688 I look for no mighty improvement of mankind in this declining age and catalysis: EVELYN, Corresp., Vol. III. p. 290 (1879).

2. in Physics, the effect produced by contact with a chemical re-agent which was supposed to cause decomposition and recombination without itself entering into actual combination with the substances affected.

catamaran (= $\angle = \angle$), sb.: Anglo-Ind. fr. Hindustani of the Deccan katmaran, ultimately fr. Tamil kaffu, = 'binding', maram, = 'wood'.

1. a raft used in India and Ceylon as a surf-boat, formed of logs of wood tied together; similar rafts are used in the Brazils.

1673 Coasting along some Cattamarans (Logs lashed to that advantage that they waft off all their Goods, only having a Sail in the midst and Paddles to guide them) made after us: FRYSER, E. India, 24 (1698). [Yule] abt. 1780 The wind was high, and the ship had but two anchors, and in the next forenoon parted from that by which she was riding, before that one which was coming from the shore on a Catamaran could reach her: ORME, Hist. Mil. Trans., &c., III. 300. [ib.] 1836 None can compare to the Catamarans and the wonderful people that manage them...each catamaran has one, two, or three men: Lett. from Madras, 34. [ib.] 1846 The catamarans used in the Brazils, and which are also common in the East Indies: YOUNG, Naut. Dict., [L.] 1883 Of these animating diversions...some idea may be formed by those who have seen a catamaran: Sat. Rev., Vol. 55, p. 411.

2. a flat-bottomed boat or a raft used for setting hostile ships on fire.

1804 The Catamaran Project: Ann. Reg., Vol. XLVI. p. 143/1. 1821 immense sums...have been...expended on Barracks, Magazines, Martello-Towers, Catamarans: In W. Cobbett's Rural Rides, Vol. 1. p. 51 (1885).

1779 I imagine there will be a large company. The invitation is to dine and spend the evening. Too much at a time. I shall be in danger of crying out, with Mr. Head, Catamaran, whatever that may mean, for it seemed to imply tediousness and disgust: JOHNSON, Lett., &c., Vol. II. p. 79 (1788). 1834 The cursed drunken old catamaran: MARRYAT, Peter Simple, ch. vi. [Davies] 1862 He and his little catamaran: THACKERAY, Philip, Vol. II. ch. viii. p. 115 (1887).

catamēnia, sb. pl.: Late Lat. fr. Gk. καταμήνια: the men-ses (q. v.).

1750 Two ancient Hindoo sages are of opinion, that if the marriage is not consummated before the first appearance of the catamenia, the girl becomes 'degraded in rank': DUNN, Unity of Human Species. [L.] bef. 1771 I am assured by persons of credit, that if they are...approached by a woman in her catamenia, they infallibly expire: SMOLLETT, Trav., Bk. 1. Let. xxii. p. 346. [Jodrell]

FOR, Wks., Vol. I. p. 260 (1884). 1854 Then comes an account of the principal dresses, chefs d'œuvre of Madame Crinoline: THACKERAY, Newcomes, Vol. I. ch. xxxvi. p. 413 (1879).

chef de cuisine, phr.: Fr., 'chief of the kitchen': head cook.

1860 your fashionable perfumer will no more allow the public to enjoy the pure perfume of the flower than a chef de cuisine will permit you to taste the natural quality of the meat: Once a Week, Dec. 8, p. 666/1. 1885 claimed her by right of ownership, as he claimed his racing stud, his chef de cuisine, his comet wines! OUIDA, Strathmore, Vol. I. ch. xv. p. 243. 1871 The untuned ear of the savage can no more enjoy the tones of civilized music than his palate would relish the elaborate dishes of a French chef de cuisine: SIR S. W. BAKER, Nile Tributaries, ch. viii. p. 139.

chef-lieu, sb.: Fr.: head-quarters, chief town.

3. a vendor of medicines and drugs.

1748 sent my landlady to a chemist's shop for some cinnamon-water: SMOLLETT, Red. Rand., ch. xix. p. 128 (1867).

[The form chemist seems to be a shortening of alchemist (q. v.). The form chymist may be borrowed fr. Fr. chimiste. There is a tendency to call a vendor of drugs, &c., a chemist, and a scientific student a chymist. The spelling chemist best preserves the history of the word in English. The spelling chymist is more correct according to the ultimate derivation. The Arab. kīmiyā is fr. post-Classical Gk. χημία, which was, as well as ἐρίμιον or ἐρίπον (see elixir), originally a name for the substance by which metals could be transmuted (the philosopher's stone), prob. derived fr. χημός, = 'juice', though some would carry it back to a Coptic word. Gradually however al-kīmiyā came to be used metonymically for the science, the object of which was the discovery of the philosopher's stone. See Gildemeister (Z D M G, xxx. 534 ff.). The later Gk. forms χημλα, χημεία are fr. Arab. kīmiyā.]

2. a cheat; in modern times spelt chouse. Gifford's note on the above quotation from Jonson tells us that in 1609 Sir Robert Shirley sent a chiaus, or agent from the Grand Signior and the Sophy, to England, who cheated the Turkish and Persian merchants of £4000, adding that two other chiauses arrived in 1618, 1625. One of the above quotations proves his accuracy as to 1618. Perhaps, however, the particular fraud had little to do with the modern use of the word. As Jonson suggests, chiaus may have been used for 'Turk' in the sense of 'cheat', just as Cataian stood for 'thief' or 'rogue'.

1610 This is the gentleman, and he is no chiause: B. JONSON, Alch., i. 2, Wks., p. 611 (1616). 1679 You'd find your self an arrant Chouse, | If y'were but at a Meeting-House: S. BUTLER, Hudibras, Pt. III. Cant. i. p. 65.

own Gardener, p. 696/2 (1803). 1808 The purple clematis, twisting its flexile branches with those of the pale woodbine, formed a sweet and fragrant canopy to the arched bower, while the flowery tendrils hung down on all sides: H. MORE, Clebs in search of a Wife, Vol. 1. p. 375. [Jodrell]

clepsydra, sb.: Lat. fr. Gk. κλεψύδρα, lit. 'steal-water': a water-clock, orig. a contrivance for measuring any definite length of time by the gradual dropping of water from a vessel perforated underneath, used to limit the speeches of advocates in the law-courts of Ancient Athens and Rome. For the Indian clepsydra, see ghurry.

1603 Who...will ever abide to take the measure of the Sunnes body, by clepsydras or water-dials, with a gallon or pinte of water? HOLLAND, Tr. Plut. Mor., p. 1322. 1646 they measured the hours not only by drops of water in glasses called Clepsydras, but also by sand in glasses called Clepsammia: SIR TH. BROWN, Parad. Ep., Bk. v. ch. xviii. p. 212 (1686). bef. 1683 Thou thought'st each hour out of life's journal lost, | Which could not some fresh favour boast, | And reckon'd'st bounties thy best clepsydras: OLDHAM, Wks., p. 78. [Jodrell] 1705 This probably gave Ctesibius of Alexandria an hint to invent the Clepsydra or Water Glasses, which distinguish'd the Hours by the fall or dropping of Water: GREENHILL, Embalming, p. 231. 1746 A description of a Clepsydra or Water-Clock: Phil. Trans., Vol. XLIV. No. 479, p. 171. 1845 here were made the clepsydras or water-clocks for the astronomical calculations of Alonso el Sabio: FORD, Handbk. Spain, Pt. II. p. 839.

cleptomaniā: quasi-Gk. See kleptomaniā.

clerum, sb.: Late Lat., 'the clergy': short for concio ad clerum, = 'a sermon to the clergy': a Latin sermon formerly preached on certain occasions at an University, or before Convocation. Articulus cleri, a separate resolution passed by the clergy assembled in Convocation.

1655 This I heard in a clerum from Dr. Collings: FULLER, Hist. Camb. Univ., vi. 5. [Davies] 1883 articulus cleri: Daily News, June 8, p. 24.

cliché, sb.: Fr.: a stereotype plate, esp. a metal copy of a wood-cut block.

*1877 the illustrations...are all from wood engravings or clichés: Times, Dec. 10. [St.] 1888 The touches of scenery (in the book) are all such clichés should be, but...they stir no sort of emotion: Athenaeum, Mar. 3, p. 273/3.

cliefe, clieve, cliff(e): Eng. fr. Fr. See clef.

clientèle, sb.: Fr.: the clients of a professional man in the aggregate, the customers of a trader, those who support, or are affected by, a worker in art or literature. The Eng. clientele (1611 B. Jonson, Cat., iii. 3, Wks., p. 772, Ed. 1616; bef. 1670 J. Hacket, Abb. Williams, I. 219, p. 213, Ed. 1693) is prob. direct fr. Lat. clientēla.

*1884 a shop with a certain clientèle bringing him such and such an income: TRACKERAY, Newcomer, Vol. 1. ch. xxxi. p. 354 (1879). 1884 The Ratanian clientèle abroad was extensive: G. A. SALA, Quite Alone, Vol. 1. ch. viii. p. 132. 1889 the supposed number of his clientèle: N.Y. Cent., Aug., p. 246. 1888 The clientèle is so small that text-book writing cannot, from the nature of things, be a profitable pursuit: Athenaeum, Oct. 9, p. 470/3.

climacter, sb.: Lat. fr. Gk. κλιμακτήρ, = 'round of a ladder' (Late Gk., 'a climacteric year'): a climacteric year, a critical point in a life, esp. a human life, generally supposed to fall when a person's age reaches a multiple of seven, especially sixty-three, the grand climacteric.

1642 in his years there is no Climacter: SIR TH. BROWN, Relig. Med., § xviii. p. 17 (1686). 1646 this may also afford a hint to enquire, what are the Climacters of other animated creatures whereof the lives of some attain not so far as this of ours, and that of others extend a considerable space beyond it: — Parad. Ep., Bk. iv. ch. xii. p. 179 (1686).

climateric, adj.: Eng. fr. Fr. climaterique: climacteric (the usual Eng. form which is fr. Lat.), adj. to climacter (q. v.).

1582 died at the age of 63, yerres with much honor, in the yeare clymactericke, which is in y^e 63. yerres wherein the life of man runneth in great perill: T. NORTH, Tr. Guenara's Dial of Princes, fol. 3^{ro}. 1837 divers unmarried ladies past their grand climateric: DICKENS, Pickwick, ch. xxxiv. p. 380.

climax (u l), sb.: Eng. fr. Lat. climax, fr. Gk. κλίμαξ, = 'ladder'.

1. Rhet. an ascending series of expressions arranged in order of effectiveness or importance.

1589 it may aswell be called the clywing figure (as the marchoing figure), for Clymax is as much to say as a ladder: PUTTENHAM, Eng. Poet., iii. p. 217 (1859). 1678 there seems to be a Climax here, that Solomon's Wisdom did not only excel the Wisdom of the Magi and of the Chaldeans, but also that of the Egyptians themselves: CUDWORTH, Intell. Syst., Bk. 1. ch. iv. p. 311. 1693 Choice between one excellency and another is difficult; and yet the conclusion, by a due climax, is evermore the best: DRYDEN, Tr. Juuv., Ded. [T.] 1771 In the climax, to which your correspondent objects, Junius adopts the language of the Court: JUNIUS, Letters, Vol. II. No. xliii. p. 149.

1 a. an ascending series generally.

bef. 1738 we rose up to Oates's Plot by a Climax of Aggravatives: R. NORTH, Examen, II. v. 7, p. 319 (1740).

2. the highest point of any gradation, esp. of the rhetorical figure of climax (1), a paragon.

1813 the climax of my eloquence: M. EDGEWORTH, Patronage, Vol. 1. p. 236 (1833). 1847 he: The climax of his age! TENNYSON, Princ., ii. Wks., Vol. IV. p. 39 (1886). 1884 As a climax to his strange proceedings, he added a tower, or belvedere, to his grandfather's old brick house: G. A. SALA, Quite Alone, Vol. 1. ch. iv. p. 64. 1888 there is perhaps a superabundance of climaxes, and a reflection of Beethoven and Schumann: Daily News, Sept. 7, p. 54.

clināmen, pl. clināmina, sb.: Lat., 'declinatio': a turning aside from a straight course, a slight inclination. Used by Lucretius to translate the Gk. κλίσις of Epicurus, the slightest conceivable deviation from a straight line, by which Epicurus accounted for the concourse of atoms and the consequent formation of the world.

1694 all his clinamen or deviation of Principles: Tr. Tavernier's Trav., Vol. II. p. 152. 1704 the light and the heavy, the round and the square, would by certain clinamina unite in the notions of atoms and void, as these did in the originals of all things: SWIFT, Tale of a Tub, § ix. Wks., p. 83/s (1869).

1. a hard, sun-baked Dutch brick of a light color.

1641 that goodly...river, so curiously wharfed with clincars [MS. clincard brick]: EVELYN, Diary, Vol. 1. p. 27 (1872).

1 a. See quotations.

1830 Clinkers, bricks impregnated with nitre, and more thoroughly burnt, by being placed next to the fire in the kiln: R. STUART, Dict. Archit. 1841 Burrs and clinkers are such bricks as have been violently burnt, or masses of several bricks run together in the clamp or kiln: GWILT, Archit.

2. a mass of bricks fused together in a kiln.

1841 [See 1 a.]

3. a hard fused mass ejected by a volcano, or formed in a furnace or fire.

4. the scale of oxide formed when iron is forged.

clinquant (l =, -qu = -k-), adj. and sb.: Eng. fr. Fr. clinquant.

1. adj.: glittering with, or like, precious metal.

1608 With clinquant Rayes their Body's clothed light: J. SYLVESTER, Tr. Du Bartas, Magnif., p. 66 (1608). 1613 To-day the French, | All clinquant, all in gold, like heathen gods, | Shone down the English: SHAKS., Ham. VIII., I. 1, 19. bef. 1816 A clinquant petticoat of some rich stuff, | To catch the eye: BEAU & FL., Md. in Mill. [T.] 1845 but the clinquant Louis XIV. periwigs act like foils, by contrasting style: FORD, Handbk. Spain, Pt. II. p. 764.

2. sb.: tinsel, an alloy formed into leaf like gold-leaf.

bef. 1682 As Coronarium or Clinquant or Brass thinly wrought out into Leaves commonly known among us: SIR TH. BROWN, Tracts, II. p. 29 (1686).

2 a. metaph. tasteless affectation of brilliance in literature or art.

1711 one Verse in Virgil is worth all the Clinquant or Tinsel of Tasso: Spectator, No. 5, Mar. 6, p. 13/s (Morley). 1771 he avoided the glare and clinquant of his countrymen: HOR. WALFOL, Vertue's Anecd. Painting, Vol. IV. p. 35. 1781 I am only surprised that, in a country like Peru, where gold and silver thread were so cheap, there was no clinquant introduced into their poetry: — Letters, Vol. VII. p. 490 (1858).

Clio, Lat. fr. Gk. Κλειώ: name of the muse of Epic poetry and History.

bef. 1539 Of heuently poems, O Clio, calde by name | In the colege of Musis goddess hystorial: J. SKELTON, Wks., Vol. 1. p. 6 (1843). 1590 Begin, O Clio! and recount from hence | My glorious Sovereignes goodly auncestry: SPENS., F. Q., III. iii. 4. 1595 Clio, proclaim with golden trump and pen | Her happy days, England's high holidays: PEELE, Anglor. Fer., p. 595/s (1861). 1887 What is legend but those expressions in concrete form of the universal elements of humanity which Clio stammers over and tries in vain to express? Athenaeum, Dec. 24, p. 856/3.

clique, sb.: Fr.: a set of persons associated together from mischievous or arrogant motives, a small circle in society.

1832 the head-quarters of a family clique: Edin. Rev., Vol. 56, p. 153. 1845 he lives and eats surrounded by a humble clique: FORD, Handbk. Spain, Pt. II. p. 725. 1881 If there be cliques, there are occasions when clique meets clique: NICHOLSON, From Sword to Share, xii. 78. 1888 there was a sort of clique formed among the gentlemen: LORD SALTOUN, Scraps, Vol. II. ch. iv. p. 214.

clister, clistre: Eng. fr. Lat. See clyster.

cloāca, pl. cloācae, sb.: Lat., 'a sewer', 'a drain', in Ancient Rome. Anglicised in 19c. as cloac.

1. a drain or sewer in Ancient Italy; hence, any sewer or drain.

1730 This sweet spark displayed all his little erudition, flourished away upon cloacas and vomitoriums with eternal fluency: BECKFORD, Italy, Vol. 1. p. 117 (1834). 1793 witness the cloacae, and the catacombs...in the neighbourhood of Rome and Naples: J. MORSE, Amer. Univ. Geogr., Vol. II. p. 424 (1796). 1809 As there was no outlet to these cloaca, nor any cabin boys on board to clean them, you may conceive what balsamic exhalations every now and then filled the boat: MATV, Tr. Riesbeck's Trav. Germ., Let. xviii. Pinkerton, Vol. VI. p. 64. 1819 Every house had its cloacæ: BOWDICH, Mission to Ashantee, Pt. II. ch. vi. p. 306. 1820 those vast cloacæ or public sewers: T. S. HUGHES, Trav. in Sicily, Vol. I. ch. i. p. 24.

2. metaph. a vehicle or receptacle for anything morally foul.

bef. 1733 the Book was a continual Libel, or rather Cloaca of Libels: R. NORTH, Examen, p. II. (1740).

3. an intestinal sac or duct terminating in an excretory orifice, into which sac or duct all the visceral excreta are led.

1843 The intestine terminates, as in the reptiles, in a common cloaca: R. OWEN, Lect. Comp. Anat., Introd. Lect. [L.] 1878 The intestine...ends in a small aboral sac or cloaca: MACALISTER, Invertebr., p. 56.

Cloāca Maxima*, the principal drain of Ancient Rome, constructed early in the sixth century B.C., a marvel of engineering skill, part of which is still in use; hence, any principal drain, and also, metaph. a main or principal vehicle or receptacle for moral filth.

1845 his ears were the cloaca maxima of offences not to be named to minor auriculars: FORD, Handbk. Spain, Pt. II. p. 674. 1857 one spot where the Cloaca maxima and Fort Esquiline of Alerba town...murmurs from beneath a grey stone arch toward the sea, not unfraught with dead rats and cats: C. KINGSLEY, Two Years Ago, p. 47 (1877).

Cloācina, a corrupt spelling of Cluacina, a title of Venus as goddess of purification: incorrectly supposed to be the Roman tutelary goddess of sewers.

[1600 Cluacina, supposed to be the image of Venus, found by K. Tatius in the great vault or sink convighed under the cite, called Cloaca maxima: HOLLAND, Tr. Livy, Index II. sig. Eecccc ij r/a.]

cloisonné*, adj.: Fr., lit. 'partitioned': for application to enamel see quotations.

1877 Cloisonné enamel unites richness of ornament with sharpness of outline: Tr. C. Blanc's Orn. & Dress, p. 260. 1885 Incrusted enamels are of two classes, cloisonné and champlevé. In the former the patterns are delineated by means of stripes of metal soldered so as to form the outlines of the metal backing of the piece to be decorated: Athenæum, Aug. 1, p. 149/2. 1886 This method of setting the precious stones in a raised framework of thin gold wire, soldered on so as to form a kind of cloisonné work, recalls the art of the Gothic goldsmiths: Art Journal, Exhib. Suppl., p. 271.

Olōthō*: Lat. fr. Gk. Κλωθώ, lit. 'the spinner': Class. Mythol.: name of one of the three Fates; depicted in art with a distaff. See Atropos, Lachesis.

1557 Tyl your last shreds gan Clotho to vntwyne: Tottel's Misc., p. 117 (1870). 1591 Parce, impartial to the highest state, | Too soon you cut what Clotho erst began: GREENE, Maiden's Dream, p. 277/2 (1861). 1608 And saw this day mark't white in CLOTHO's booke: B. JONSON, Pt. of King's Entertainment, Wks., p. 849 (1616). 1695 His odious Name Small-Pox, whom when pleas'd Clotho saw, | She streight a slender Thread was seen to draw, | Which envious Lachesis soon on the Distaff put: | And Atropos as soon prepar'd with bloody Shears to cut: D'URVEY, Gloriana, ix. p. 15.

clōture*, sb.: Fr.: closure, termination of a parliamentary debate. The general principle that the majority has power to terminate a debate, was borrowed from abroad, and the term clōture from the French Legislative Assembly. In 1882 clōture seemed likely to be established in English use, but is now replaced by a fresh use of the old closure.

1882 the two-thirds majority limitation of the Clōture proposal: Standard, Dec. 20, p. 5.

coach*, coche, sb.: Eng. fr. Fr. coche.

1. any kind of wheeled vehicle for state purposes, or private use, earlier called 'chariot', or 'charet(te)', esp. a closed vehicle with four wheels, originally used by the wealthy; said to have been introduced in the reign of Queen Elizabeth, according to Taylor the Water Poet, by her coachman, in 1564. Taylor says "for indeed a Coach was a strange monster in those dayes, and the sight of them put both horse and man into amazement: some said it was a great Crab-shell brought out of China, and some imagin'd it to be one of the Pagan Temples, in which the Canibals adored the divell: but at last those doubts were cleared, and Coach-making became a substantial Trade" (Wks., sig. Bbb 2 v/r). Southey (Comm. pl. Bk., 1st Ser., p. 431/2, 1849), however, tells us that, according to Fynes Moryson, coaches were rare about 1540, and so Taylor himself, both probably speaking of wheeled vehicles for private use, rather than the special kind to which the above quot. refers. According to Johnson a coach is "distinguished from a chariot by having seats fronting each other". Hackney-coaches which plied for hire, introduced about the middle of 17 c., were the forerunners of the modern four-wheeled cab.

1567 they cannot without a very great forfeit ride in coaches or chariots...but are constrained...to walk a-foot in the streets: JEWEL, Def. Lett., &c., p. 643 (1850). 1576 She was the first that did invent | In coaches brave to ride: In Peele's Wks., p. 373 (1861). 1580 she beckend her hand for me: I cam to her coach side: DEE, Diary, p. 9 (Camd. [The derivation of Fr. coche directly fr. Lat. concha is unsatisfactory owing to coche being masc. It may be that an early coche (fem.), = 'boat', has become confused with coche (masc.), = 'coach', fr. It. coccio (so Diez), or else the word coche is directly fr. a Celtic form akin to Cornish coc, and Welsh cawch. Cognate masc. forms are Gk. κόκκος, = 'cockle-shell', Skt. çankha, = 'conch-shell'. The It. coccio is either a masc. dim. fr. fem. cocca, fr. Lat. concha (so Diez), or fr. Hungarian kotsi (see quot. fr. Peacham, 1622).]

cocoa[-nut], coco[-nut], coco(a), sb.: Eng. fr. Sp. and Port. coco: the fruit of a kind of palm, Cocos nucifera, which flourishes on coasts within a zone extending 25° north and south of the Equator. The form cochen is Du. The form cocoa-nut is very rarely used for the fruit of the Cacao (see cocoa). The word nut is often omitted in speaking of the fruit, just as in Port. and Sp. coco stands for both the tree and the fruit. The spelling coco-nut is etymologically correct. The double cocoa-nut is the fruit of the palm Lodoicea Sechellarum, which only grows on the Seychelles Islands. The nuts are washed up on the shores of the Indian Ocean, and are hence called coco de mer or sea-cocoa-nut.

 1768 I desired the girl to present my compliments to Madame R.: STERNE, Sentiment. Journ., Wks., p. 436 (1839).

2. a flattering speech or act, a commendation.

1609 I urge not this to insinuate my desert, | Or supple your tried temper with soft phrases; | True friendship loathes such oily compliment: B. JONSON, Case is All, i. 2, Wks., p. 506/2 (1860).
 1671 To sit and hear | So many hollow compliments and lies: MILTON, P. R., iv. 124.
 1679 you have imported French goods, I mean Compliments, they are a Nation full of Complimenters: SHADWELL, True Widow, ii. p. 23.
 1715 But Rafaille has made his beloved Dante still a greater Complement: RICHARDSON, Theor. Painting, p. 74.
 1768 I have always observed, when there is as much sour as sweet in a compliment, that an Englishman is eternally at a loss within himself whether to take it or let it alone: STERNE, Sentiment. Journ., Wks., p. 401 (1839).
 1815 She was extremely gratified at such a compliment: J. AUSTEN, Emma, Vol. III. ch. vi. p. 316 (1833).

3. a present, a gratuity. Only used in Scotland. [C.] In the quot. compliment is a modern change from complement (Ed. 1640), = 'accessory'.

1616 you must furnish me with compliments, | To the manner of Spain; my coach, my guardaduennas: B. JONSON, Dev. is an Ass, iii. 1, Wks., p. 360/1 (1860).

complot (∟ ∟), sb.: Eng. fr. Fr. complot, = 'a conspiracy', 'a plot'. In Shakespeare the accent is variable.

1. a conspiracy, a plot, intrigue, a preconcerted plan of action.

1588 The complot of this timeless tragedy: SHAKS., Tit. And., ii. 3, 265.

2. the scheme or subject (of a literary composition). Rare.

1651 a Sonnet...whereof the complot...had as much of the Hermit as of the Poet: Reliq. Wotton, p. 165 (1685).

[The derivation of Fr. complot is doubtful; according to Diez, fr. Lat. complicitum. The Eng. word plot, = 'conspiracy', has been regarded as an abbrev. fr. complot, but is found 1579 in Fenton's Guicciardini, a few years earlier than the earliest Eng. use of complot hitherto recorded in a dictionary. The Eng. plot, = 'a patch of ground', came to mean 'plan' (cf. Cotgr., Plateforme). The change of meaning of Eng. plot from 'ground-plan' to 'scheme' is exactly analogous to the change in Eng. of plan from "ground-plan of a building" (Cotgr.) to 'scheme'. It seems therefore a mistake to separate plot, = 'conspiracy', from Eng. plot, plat, = 'plan'.]

compluvium, pl. compluvia, sb.: Lat.: a quadrangular opening in the middle of the roof of the atrium in a Roman house, towards which the roof sloped on each side, so that the rain which fell on the roof flowed into a tank called impluvium, beneath the opening.

1885 He must come down the chimney or through the compluvium opening in the roof: Athenaeum, Aug. 22, p. 244/2.

2. intr. (often used with prep. with) to accord, to be complacent, to yield out of sympathy or forbearance, to conform, to agree, to be formally courteous.

1603 [See compliment 1]. 1664 Your hands, come then: the appurtenance of welcome is fashion and ceremony: let me comply with you in this garb: SHAKS., Ham., ii. 2, 390.
 1671 Yet this be sure, in nothing to comply | Scandalous or forbidden in our law: MILTON, Sams. Agon., 1408.
 1679 He that complies against his will, | Is of his own opinion still: S. BUTLER, Hudibras, Pt. III. Cant. iii. p. 380 (1866).
 bef. 1694 The truth of things will not comply with our conceits, and bend itself to our interest: TILLOTSON. [J.]

[In the subjoined quot. comply seems to be a distinct word, fr. Lat. complacere, = 'fold up', supposed by Herrick to have the sense of complecti, = 'to embrace'. 1648 Witty Ovid by | Whom faire Corinna sits, and doth comply | With yvorie wrists his laureat head: HERRICK, Hesp., p. 221. (Davies)]

compos mentis, phr.: Lat.: having control over one's mind, of sound mind, in such possession of one's mental faculties as to be able to transact legal or other business. See non compos mentis.

1586 grawnits, privileges, and concessions given to hym and to his see apperteyning: Suppres. of Monast., p. 92 (Camd. Soc., 1843). 1655 Whatever concessions are to be granted, they must be to all alike: EVELYN, Corresp., Vol. iv. p. 307 (1872). 1882, 1888 [See concessionnaire].

*concessionnaire, sb.: Fr.: a person to whom a concession has been granted by a government. The Eng. equivalents, concessionary, concessioner, do not seem to make way against the original Fr. term.

1882 His Majesty has granted fifteen Firmans for the construction of public works and for concessions for industrial enterprises, one of which, for working chrome mines, has been accorded to an English firm. Among the other concessionnaires are several Turkish subjects and an Italian: Standard, Dec. 18, p. 3. 1884 The concessionaire was to receive a certain amount for every kilometre completed: M. ARNOLD, in Contemp. Rev., p. 405. 1888 a concession was granted...to one Cicero de Pontes, and certain other concessionaires...for the making of a railway from Natal to Nova Cruz: HAWKINS, in Law Times Reports, N. S., LX. 61/2.

*concetto, pl. concetti, sb.: It.: a conceit, an affected term of expression intended to be witty or elegant, a piece of artificial wit, a specimen of affected style.

1750 epigrams, concetti, and quibbles: LORD CHESTERFIELD, Letters, Vol. i. No. 185, p. 564 (1774). 1759 one might string concetti for an hour: HOR. WALPOLE, Letters, Vol. iii. p. 279 (1857). 1782 Lord Chesterfield took from Casimir the pretty thought (too much indeed bordering upon a concetto) that evening dew is "the tears of the day for the loss of the sun": Gent. Mag. 1801.

1812 The false refinements, the concetti, the ingenious turns and misplaced subtlety, which have so long been the reproach of the Italian literature: JEFFREYS, Essays, Vol. i. p. 122 (1844). 1813 The false refinements, the concetti...so long...the reproach of the Italian literature: Edin. Rev., Vol. 21, p. 39.

*concierge, sb.: Fr.: the door-keeper of a public building, hotel, or house let off in apartments.

1647 He is known and re-known by the concierges, by the judges, by the greater part of the senate: SIR G. BUCK, Rich. III., p. 99. [T.] bef. 1700 The Conciierge that shewed the house: AUBREY, Lives, Vol. ii. p. 230 (1813). 1781 tell me who he was, and as I suppose he lived ages ago, what he expended on concierges: HOR. WALPOLE, Letters, Vol. viii. p. 60 (1858). 1880 But when the concierge closed the house-door behind him, it seemed to shut him out from gaiety and good humour: J. PAYN, Confident. Agent, ch. xvi. p. 301.

*conciergerie, sb.: Fr.: the office or room of a concierge, a prison.

1617 The Marshall d'Ancre his wife is removed from the Bastill to the Conciergerie in Paris, a common gaol as our Newgate: G. L. CAREW, Lett., p. 107 (Camd. Soc., 1860). 1828 They stopped at the door of an hotel, which opened in that noiseless manner so peculiar to the conciergerie of France: LORD LYTTON, Pelham, ch. xxix. p. 82 (1859). 1847 All these circumstances furnish such strong presumptive evidence against the Duke that he has been transferred to the conciergerie: H. GREVILLE, Diary, p. 198.

conciliabule, sb.: Fr.: a secret committee, a meeting of a secret committee.

1857 We know that these conciliabules were at work, especially in the Faubourgs St. Antoine and St. Marceau: J. W. CROKER, Essays Fr. Rev., iv. p. 193. — the last conciliabule held in the faubourgs during the night of the 19th: ib., p. 194. 1886 Their conciliabules meet daily and talk great nonsense and do nothing: Blackwood's Mag., July, p. 24/2.

conciliator (= ㄣ ㄣ), sb.: Eng. fr. Lat. conciliator, noun of agent to conciliare, 'to unite', 'gain over', 'bring together': one who or that which gains over or pacifies.

1684 but he is too raw to be judicious in either, too wilful to be a Conciliator of both: R. WHITLOCK, Zootomia, p. 108. bef. 1670 he thought it would be his great Honour to be the Conciliator of Christendom: J. HACKER, Abp. Williams, Pt. i. 111, p. 101 (1693). 1765 tipping the searcher with half-a-crown, which is a wonderful conciliator at all the bureaux in this country: SMOLLETT, France & Italy, xxxix. Wks., Vol. v. p. 547 (1817).

conciliatrix, sb. fem.: Lat.: a woman who conciliates; esp. a professional match-maker in Ancient Rome.

1836 To be the intermediaries of her marriage—so far as English women of good birth can play the part of the old Roman conciliatrix—: MRS. E. LYNN LINTON, Paston Carew, Vol. i. ch. ix. p. 158.

conclo ad clérum, phr.: Late Lat.: a sermon before the clergy (see clérum).

1620—1 On Wednesday, the convocation began in Paul's, where the concio ad clérum was made by Dr. Bowles, who performed it so so: J. CHAMBERLAIN, in Court & Times of Jas. I., Vol. ii. p. 218 (1848). 1625 a Concio ad Clérum, in Saint Maries Church in Cambridge: I. RODOGINUS, Differences, p. 29. 1664 besides what he had delivered in public in his Concio ad Clérum: J. WORTHINGTON, Life, in Jos. Mede's Wks., p. iv.

coup d'éclat, phr.: Fr.: stroke of brilliance, a glorious achievement, a flashy success.

1712 To put the Watch to a total Rout, and mortify some of those inoffensive Militia, is reckon'd a Coup d'éclat: Spectator, No. 324, Mar. 12, p. 470/2 (Morley). 1714 that dreadful coup d'éclat, [Which has afforded these much chat: SWIFT, Parnassus, Wks., Vol. x. p. 407 (1814). 1763 The new Ministry are trying to make up for their ridiculous insignificance by a coup d'éclat: HOR. WALPOLE, Letters, Vol. IV. p. 74 (1857). 1819 thinking it would be a coup d'éclat much more important and agreeable, if he could settle the Warsaw palaver as well: BOWDICH, Mission to Ashantee, Pt. I. ch. vi. p. 123.

coup d'essai, phr.: Fr.: stroke of trial, a trial-piece, a piece of work serving for experiment or practice.

1712 I have a Design this Spring to make...and have already begun with a Coup d'essai upon the Sleeves: Spectator, No. 319, Mar. 6, p. 469/1 (Morley). 1748 he had perused my play, which he thought, on the whole, was the best coup d'essai he had ever seen: SMOLLETT, Rad. Rand., ch. lxiii. Wks., Vol. I. p. 444 (1817). 1787 The Cupola is said to have been his coup d'essai before he attempted that of the Duomo: P. BECKFORD, Lett. fr. Ital., Vol. I. p. 137 (1805). 1807 It is a pleasing circumstance for an unpractised writer to be able, for his coup d'essai, to correct a historian of such eminence as Mr. Gibbon: Edin. Rev., Vol. 9, p. 300. 1831 but this coup d'essai was sufficiently ambitious: ib., Vol. 54, p. 466. 1845 This work seems...to be a respectable coup d'essai, written with some thought: J. W. CROKER, Essays Fr. Rev., I. p. 6 (1857).

coup d'état, phr.: Fr.: stroke of state, piece of high policy, violent political measure; esp. one in which opposition is repressed by military force.

1646 These were the two first Coups d'état, strokes of State that he made: HOWELL, Lewis XIII., p. 157. 1849 Now, see a coup d'état that saves all:

LORD BEACONSFIELD, Tancred, Bk. IV. ch. iii. p. 263 (1881). 1852 The Directory, hitherto, has not been very pacifically inclined, but having struck what is called a coup d'état, they at length saw the necessity of obtaining absolution from the discontented by giving peace to France: Tr. Bourrienne's Mem. N. Bonaparte, ch. vi. p. 70. 1877 Echo, Nov. 26. [St.]

coup d'œil, phr.: Fr., 'stroke of eye': glance, view taken in at a glance, the effect produced by a scene at the first glance.

1739 All this you have at one coup d'œil in entering the garden, which is truly great: GRAY, Letters, No. xxi. Vol. I. p. 43 (1819). 1749 they content themselves with the first coup d'œil: LORD CHESTERFIELD, Letters, Vol. I. No. 143, p. 362 (1774). 1773 Nuneham astonished me with the first coup d'œil of its ugliness: HOR. WALPOLE, Letters, Vol. v. p. 489 (1857). 1787 One of the most pleasing coup d'œil I ever remember was the ball at court, the last day of the carnival: P. BECKFORD, Lett. fr. Ital., Vol. I. p. 85 (1805). 1810 such beautiful engravings and ingenious charts and coup d'œil of information: Edin. Rev., Vol. 17, p. 169. 1813 The first coup d'œil decided the fate of all who appeared: M. EDGEWORTH, Patronage, Vol. II. p. 115 (1833). 1818 brings within the compass of a coup d'œil some of the noblest public edifices and spacious streets to be found in the most leading cities of Europe: LADY MORGAN, Fl. Macarthy, Vol. I. ch. i. p. 46 (1819). 1834 The coup d'œil of the Louvre is very magnificent: Edin. Rev., Vol. 39, p. 73. 1839 The entrance to the Black Sea...is the grandest coup d'œil on the Bosphorus: MISS PARDON, Beauties of the Bosph., p. 81. 1846 The coup d'œil of the Brussels opera-house did not strike Mr. O'Dowd as being so fine as the theatre in Fishamble Street, Dublin: THACKERAY, Van. Fair, Vol. I. ch. xxix. p. 304 (1879). 1852 with that coup d'œil which seldom deceived him, he ordered a new battery to be constructed: Tr. Bourrienne's Mem. N. Bonaparte, ch. xiv. p. 180. 1871 The coup d'œil was beautiful, as the camel entered the enclosure with the shaggy head and massive paws of the dead lion hanging upon one flank: SIR S. W. BAKER, Nile Tributaries, ch. x. p. 131 (1884). 1876 it was, indeed, a charming coup d'œil: Times, May 15. [St.]

coup de baguette, phr.: Fr.: stroke with a wand or light stick.

1761 this may come round again, like a coup de baguette, when one least expects it: HOR. WALPOLE, Letters, Vol. III. p. 457 (1857). 1781 I shall like with your leave to print your alterations hereafter, for I think them, as I said, performed by a coup de baguette: ib., Vol. VIII. p. 36 (1858).

coup de bâton, phr.: Fr.: stroke with a stick or rod.

1773 was rewarded for his impudence with a volley of coups de bâton: HOR. WALPOLE, Letters, Vol. v. p. 507 (1857).

coup de front, phr.: Fr.: blow in front.

1780 He seems as if he would take you by a coup de front and jump down your throat: In J. H. Jesse's Geo. Setwyn & Contemp., Vol. IV. p. 397 (1882).

coup de grâce, phr.: Fr.: stroke of grace, stroke of mercy, finishing stroke.

1720 Yesterday came out an Arret wch. has given what the French call the Coup de Grace to the Bank Notes, they being thereby declared Null at the end of this Month: W. AYERST, quoted in Eng. Hist. Rev., July, 1889, p. 544. 1731 The Coup de Grace, or Heart-Blow, as it is call'd, not being given 'em, they were taken alive from the wheel: MEDLEY, Tr. Kolben's Case Good Hope, Vol. I. p. 362. bef. 1733 sweeping out of the World the King and the Duke of York, both together, with one Coup de Grace from the Mouth of a Munderbus, is of no Concern at all to us: R. NORTH, Examen, II. v. 2, p. 316 (1740). 1756 and therefore it is very indifferent to me, what minister shall give us the last coup de grace: LORD CHESTERFIELD, Lett., Bk. II. No. cix. Misc. Wks., Vol. II. p. 435 (1777). 1771 one of the warriors, stealing behind him, gave him the coup de grâce with a hatchet: SMOLLETT, Humph. Cl., p. 70/2 (1882). 1775 I imagine she will escape a trial; but Foote has given her the coup de grace: HOR. WALPOLE, Letters, Vol. VI. p. 252 (1857). 1824 the Romans...gave the coup de grace to their military and political power: Edin. Rev., Vol. 40, p. 388. 1835 This would have been a coup de grace not only to Robespierre's present power in the commune but probably to the hopes that he was building on it, of his election to the Convention: J. W. CROKER, Essays Fr. Rev., VI. p. 346 (1857). 1845 the matador...advances to the bull...plays with him a little...and then prepares for the coup de grâce: FORD, Handbk. Spain, Pt. I. p. 182. 1853 [the bear] was brought to bay, and received the coup-de-grace from a bayonet: E. K. KANE, 1st Grinnell Exped., ch. xvi. p. 118. 1871 In a short time the whole party arrived, and, as Florian had wounded the animal, his servant Richman considered that he would give the coup de grâce: SIR S. W. BAKER, Nile Tributaries, ch. xiii. p. 224.

coup de hasard, phr.: Fr.: lucky chance, the risking of a stake.

1865 dangerous coups de hasard at roulette: OUIDA, Strathmore, Vol. I. ch. xiii. p. 208.

coup de main, phr.: Fr., 'stroke of hand': a sudden and resolute assault.

1758 Coup de main and Manoeuvre might be excusable in Marshal Saxe as he was in the service of France, but we cannot see what apology can be made for our officers lugging them in by head and shoulders: Ann. Reg., I. Humble Remonstrance, &c., p. 373/2. 1763 a certain impetuosity which makes them fitter for a coup de main: FATHER CHARLEVOIX, Acc. Voy. Canada, p. 104. 1772 As if an appeal to the public were no more than a military coup de main, where a brave man has no rules to follow, but the dictates of his courage: JUNIUS, Letters, Vol. I. No. iii. p. 25. 1792 and he has little hope unless from a coup de main, before the armies of the enemy are collected: Amer. State Papers,

For. Relat., Vol. i. p. 330 (1832). 1799 It appears more like a line of march than a body intended for a coup de main, as there are with it bullocks and baggage of different kinds: WASHINGTON, Disp., Vol. i. p. 25 (1844). 1803 Should force be necessary, Governor Claiborne and General Wilkinson would have to decide on the practicability of a coup de main, without waiting for reinforcements: Amer. State Papers, Vol. ii. p. 372 (1832). 1813 Passion always conquers art at a coup de main: M. EDGEWORTH, Patronage, Vol. ii. p. 129 (1833). 1819 It is only when the commander of the whole nation purposes some definite expedition or coup-de-main of great importance and short duration, that all the lesser Schajchs and their vassals close in round his standard: T. HORN, Anast., Vol. iii. ch. viii. p. 210 (1820). 1840 The Koords of Amadia were so appalled by this coup-de-main, that it was supposed they would give up the place without any more fighting: FRASER, Koordistan, &c., Vol. i. Let. iii. p. 76. 1844 The idea of advancing upon Gembloix, and of capturing Brussels by a coup de main: W. SIBORNE, Waterloo, Vol. i. ch. v. p. 96.

coup de maître*, phr.: Fr.: master-piece.

I. p. 45. 1738 The Cral, or despot of the Servians, received him with generous hospitality: GIBBON, Decl. & Fall, Vol. XI. p. 378 (1813). 1819 to come and spy disguised in our own dress the nakedness of our land; in order that their Crals may know how to conquer it: T. HOPE, Anast., Vol. II. ch. vi. p. 118 (1820). 1820 they were governed by an hereditary monarch, under the title of Cral, a Slavonic word signifying king: T. S. HUGHES, Trav. in Sicily, Vol. II. p. 6.

crambē, sb.: Lat. fr. Gk. κράμβη, 'cabbage'; bis cocta, Lat., 'twice cooked'; recocta, Lat., 'cooked again'; bis positum, an error for Lat. bis posita, 'twice served'. Re-cooked cabbage suggested to the Romans insipid, nauseous repetition, a twice-told tale. Cf. Juv., 7, 154, crambe repetita.

bef. 1570 I marvel that you, so fine a feeder, will fall to your crambe: CALF-HILL, Wks., p. 320 (1846). [Davies] 1576 but they do so hunt a letter to death, that they make it Crambē, and Crambe bis positum mors est ['is death']: therefore Ne quid nimis: G. GASKOIGNZ, in Haslewood's Eng. Poets & Poetry, Vol. II. p. 12 (1815). 1603 so to obtrude them the second time, like twice sidden Crambe is as tedious and irksome: C. HEYDON, Def. Judic. Astrol.,

p. 227. 1611 Objecting that this is Crambe his cocta as it is in the Pro-verbe: T. CORYAT, Crudities, sig. b 8 r (1776). — Coryat's Crambe, or his Colworte twice sodden, and now served in with other Macaronicke dishes, as the second Course to his Crudities. — Title. 1642 I...say, there is no hap-piness under...the Sun; nor any Crambe in that repeated verity and burthen of all the Wisdom of Solomon: SIR TH. BROWN, Relig. Med., Pt. II. § xiv. p. 45 (1686). 1658 narrating crambie verities and questions over-queried: — Garden of Cyr., ch. 5, p. 51. 1659 No repeated Crambes of Christ's discipline, of Elders and Elderships...no engine was capable to buoy up Presbytery: GAUDEN, Tears of Church, p. 17. [Davies] 1669 the rest [of his Comedies] are but a Crambe his cocta: DRYDEN, Mock-Astrol., Pref., Wks., Vol. I. sig. Nn i r (1701). bef. 1733 There is the Crambe of the Faction: R. NORTH, Examen, p. 684 (1740). 1760 The town are reading the King of Prussia's poetry (Le Philo-sophe sans souci), and I have done like the town...it is all the scum of Voltaire and Lord Bolingbroke, the crambie recoccta of our worst free-thinkers, tossed up in German-French rhyme: GRAY, Wks., Vol. I. p. 382 (1814). 1806 and, while you excrete the very name of a hound, being gorged with the crambie recoccta of one fox-chase after another: BERRISFORD, Miseries, Vol. I. p. 159 (5th Ed.). 1820 There was a disadvantage, notwithstanding, in treading this Border district, for it had been already ransacked by the author himself, as well as others; and unless presented under a new light, was likely to afford ground to the objection of Crambe his cocta: SCOTT, Monastery, Wks., Vol. II. p. 389/1 (1867).

crambo, crambe, sb.: origin unknown: a game in which one person names a word to which another has to find rhymes, or which he has to introduce as the last word of a verse of a rhymed couplet; hence, a rhyme.

1616 F. Ioule, owle, foule, troule, boule. P. Crambe, another of the Diuel's games! B. JONSON, Dev. is an Ass, v. 8, Wks., Vol. II. p. 169 (1631-40). 1630 Where every jovial tinker, for his chink, | May cry, Mine host, to crambie! Give us drink; | And do not stink, but stink, or else you stink: — New Inn, i. 1, Wks., p. 409/2 (1860). 1670 Such as your Ears with Love, and Honour feast, | And play at Crambo for three hours at least: SHADWELL, Sull. Lovers, Prol., sig. B i r. 1711 a Game of Crambo. I heard several Double Rhymes as I passed: Spectator, No. 63, May 12, p. 104/2 (Morley). 1712 who can play at Crambo, or cap Verses: ib., No. 504, Oct. 8, p. 718/1. bef. 1745 So Mævius...His similes in order set | And every crambie he could get: SWIFT, [L.] 1815 his court around him resounded with such crambo scraps of verse as these: SCOTT, Guy Mannering, ch. xxxvi. p. 311 (1852).

Czar, czar, sb.: Eng. fr. Russ. tsare, = 'king', 'emperor' (esp. of Byzantine empire), 'sultan'. First assumed in dealings with foreigners by Ivan III., bef. 1505, and adopted as the specific title of royalty by Ivan IV., 1547. Though czar is ultimately derived fr. Caesar, the title did not at first convey the idea of imperial dignity. Ivan III., however, assumed it in connexion with his claim to be the successor of the Byzantine emperors. The word tsare was imported into the Russian language long before 1500, but was not applied to native sovereigns.

1555 Note therfore that Czar in the Ruthens tounge signifeth a kynge, wheras in the language of the Slauians, Pollons, Bohemes, and other, the same woorde Czar, signifeth Cesar by whiche name Th[e] emperours haue byn commonly cauled. For bothe they and the Slauians that are vnder the kyngdome of Hungarie, caule a kynge by an other name: as sum Crall, other Kyrrall, and sum Koroll: but thinke that only an Emperoure is cauled Czar. Whereby it came to passe that the Ruthene or Muscouite interpretours hearynge theyr prince to bee cauled of straunge nations, began them selues also to name hym an Emperour, and thinke the name Czar to bee more worthy then the name of a kynge, although they signifie all one thyng. But who so wyl reade all theyr hystories and bookes of holy scripture, shall fynde that a kynge is cauled Czar, and an Emperour Kessar. By the lyke erreure Th[e] emperour of the Turkes is cauled Czar, who neuerthelesse of antiquitie vsed no hygher tytyle then the name of a kynge, expressed by this woorde Czar. And hereof the Turkes of Europe that vse the Slauiou tounge, caule the cite of Constantinople Czargrad, (that is) the kynges cite: R. EDEN, Decades, Sect. iv. p. 319 (1885). 1598 call himselfe the Monarch or Czar of all Russia: R. HAKLUYT, Voyages, Vol. I. p. 223. — by his princely state hee is called Otsara, as his predecessors haue bene before, which to interpret, is a king, that giueth not tribute to any man. And this word Otsara his maiesties interpreters haue of late dayes interpreted to be Emperour, so that now hee is called Emperour and great Duke of all Russia: ib., p. 319. 1614 Basilius... took to himselfe the name of King or Emperour, i. Czar, not deriued from Cesar... but a meer Russian word, they vsing Kessar expressly and anciently for the Emperour of Germany, different from Czar: SELDEN, *Tit. *differentia, sb.: Lat.: a difference; a characteristic which constitutes an essential distinction between one species and another, or one individual and another; a quality or property essential to exact scientific definition and classification.

1543 which characteristics would of course be so many differentiae for the definition of the power itself: J. S. MILL, System of Logic, Vol. I. p. 159 (1856). 1883 M. Bourne's [book] has at least a certain differentia of its own: Sat. Rev., Vol. 56, p. 584/1. 1885 A tabular summary...gives the differentia of the chief meteorological elements in each month: Athenæum, Aug. 29, p. 273/3.

digamma, sb.: Lat. fr. Gk. δῖγαμμα: the double gamma, the sixth letter of the old Doric and Æolic Greek alphabets, so named from its shape, F. It answered to the Heb. ך, and the Lat. consonantal u, and was probably pronounced something like an Eng. w. As a numeral, the digamma, in a modified form, had the value of six.

1699 the little use of his new invented Letter the Digamma, which he instituted or borrowed from the Eolique to express V Consonant: M. LISTER, Journ. to Paris, p. 50. 1729 While tow'ring o'er your Alphabet, like Saul, | Stands our Digamma, and o'er-tops them all: POPE, Dunciad, iv. 218 (1757). 1830 The Boustrophedon mode of writing, and the Digamma, which it appears to contain, are additional proofs of its high antiquity: T. S. HUGHES, Trav. in Sicily, Vol. i. ch. xii. p. 369. 1885 The most curious thing of all... is the existence of a gamma under circumstances which are at once suggestive of the old digamma in real life: Athenæum, July 11, p. 481/2.

digitalis, sb.: Lat., 'belonging to the finger'.

1. Bot. name of a genus of plants, Nat. Order Scrophulariaceae, of which the Foxglove, Digitalis purpurea, is a common English species.

digito monstrari, phr.: Lat.: to be pointed out by the finger, to be distinguished (Hor., Od., 4, 3, 22).

1819 Even were that event to happen, I am not ambitious of the honoured distinction, digito monstrari: SCOTT, Bride of Lammermoor, ch. i. Wks., Vol. i. p. 966/1 (1857). 1885 You will want the triumph of the monstrari digito, and the guidance of the helm through stormy waters: OUIDA, Strathmore, Vol. i. ch. v. p. 73.

dignus vindice nodus, phr.: Lat.: a complication (knot) worthy of a (divine) deliverer. See Hor., A. P., 191, where he deprecates the introduction of a deus ex machina in a drama, unless it is indispensable to the plot.

bef. 1783 Here was dignus vindice nodus: R. NORTH, Examen, iii. vi. 51, p. 460 (1740). 1749 The former is steady and unshaken, where the nodus is dignus vindice; the latter is oftener improperly than properly exerted, but always brutally: LORD CHESTERFIELD, Letters, Vol. i. No. 175, p. 521 (1774). 1760 or perhaps it may not be dignus vindice nodus, and the present security of Jones may be accounted for by natural means: FIELDING, Tom Jones, Bk. ix. ch. v. Wks., Vol. vi. p. 541 (1806). 1765 HOR. WALPOLE, Letters, Vol. iv. p. 333 (1857). 1779 I cannot conveniently wait on you to-morrow morning, but will if it be a dignus nodus: In J. H. Jesse's Geo. Selwyn & Contemporaries, Vol. iv. p. 345 (1882). 1817 but this dignus vindice nodus has proved equally intractable by crystallographical distinctions: Edin. Rev., Vol. 28, p. 189.

digue, sb.: Fr.: bank, jetty.

1670 There is a digue leading unto it from the Land: R. LASSELS, Voy. Ital., Pt. II. p. 171 (1698). 1886 There are several good figures of girls gossiping on the digue of stone which defends the place against the sea: Athenæum, May 22, p. 586/1.

dii majores, phr.: Lat.: the greater gods; hence, metaph. men of the first rank of merit.

1889 One by one the dii majores are leaving us: Carlyle, George Eliot, Matthew Arnold; and now Robert Browning... has passed into silence: Athenæum, Dec. 21, p. 858/1.

dii minores, phr.: Lat.: the lesser gods; hence, metaph. men of the second rank of merit.

1882 There is a great gap between him and the dii minores, able young men, the promising littérateurs of the future: Athenæum, Dec. 30, p. 886. 1888 She has taken her place among the dii minores of the book world: Academy, Nov. 3, p. 283/3.

dii omen avertant, phr.: Lat.: may the gods avert the omen.

diambus, sb.: Lat. fr. Gk. δίαμβος: a double iambus, an iambic dipody, — — —.

diis aliter visum, phr.: Lat.: it seemed good to the gods (that it should be) otherwise. Virg. Aen., 2, 428.

1803 MACDONNELL, Dict. Quot.

dilapidator ($\text{—} = \text{—} = \text{—}$), sb.: Eng., as if Lat. noun of agent to dilapidare, = 'to cause decay' (of buildings, &c.): one who causes dilapidations, one who neglects proper repairs.

1711 The late bishop, a monstrous dilapidator of that see: STYVE, Life of Parker. [C. E. D.]

dilecta delicta, phr.: Late Lat.: beloved sins.

1688 So when God strikes a parting blow between us and our dilecta delicta, or right hand sins, let us see a mercy in it and be thankful: J. TRAPP, Com. New Test., p. 681/1 (1868).

dilemma, sb.: Lat. fr. Gk. δίλημμα, = 'a double catch'.

1. Log. and Rhet. a double proposition, an argument in which an adversary is caught between two alternative difficulties. Such an argument was likened to a fork or a pair of horns.

1582 Dilemma, otherwise complexio, vel cornutus Syllogismus, called a horned argument, is when the reason consisteth of repugnant members, so that whatsoever you graunt, you fall into the snare, and take the foyle: T. WILSON, Rule of Reas., fol. 34 v^o (1567).

1588 Thus was the poore manne perplexed with a doubtfull dilemma: GREENE, Pandosto, Wks., p. 48 (1861). 1589 the dilemma of the Logicians: PUTTENHAM, Eng. Poes., iii. p. 230 (1869).

1602 the scrupulous catholikes perplexed with many dilemmas betwixt religion and loyalty: W. WATSON, Quodlibets of Relig. & State, p. 264. 1641 repair the achelion horn of your dilemma how you can, against the next push: MILTON, Animadv., Wks., Vol. i. p. 173 (1806).

1654 that swound at a Syllogism, purge both wayes at a Dilemma and are ready to make their own Testament: R. WHITLOCK, Zootomia, p. 162. 1665 so equivocal is the word Erythraum, that I cannot refrain the giving you a glance thereof, to the end you may the better help in this dilemma: SIR TH. HERBERT, Trav., p. 107 (1677).

bef. 1670 Now here's a forked Dilemma: J. HACKETT, Abp. Williams, Pt. II. 125, p. 132 (1693). *1877 various famous dilemmas: Sat. Rev., Nov. 24, p. 661/2. [St.]

2. metaph. a difficult and perplexing situation, an awkward predicament.

1598 in perplexity and doubtful dilemma: SHAKS., Merry Wives, iv. 5, 87. 1617 Blood follows blood through forty generations, | And I've a slow-pac'd wrath—a shrewd dilemma! MIDDLETON, Fair Quar., ii. 1, Wks., Vol. iv. p. 185 (1885).

1640 A dilemma put upon the Parliament either to try or not to try John Lillburne: EVKLYN, Corresp., Vol. III. p. 53 (1850). bef. 1667 Whom Good or Ill does equally confound, | And both the Horns of Fate's Dilemma wound: COWLEY, Wks., Vol. i. p. 122 (1707).

1674 this way of taking [when a pawn has attacked two pieces at once] is called a Fork or Dilemma: Compl. Gamester, p. 71. bef. 1739 Or which must end me a Fool's wrath or love? A dire dilemma! either way I'm sped: POPE, Prolog. to Satires, 31, Wks., Vol. iv. p. 12 (1757).

1751 the House and its honour grew outrageous at the dilemma they were got into: HOR. WALPOLE, Letters, Vol. II. p. 240 (1857). 1776 This dilemma, however, was at an end: J. COLLIER, Mus. Trav., Ded., p. II. 1814 I am in, what the learned call a dilemma, and the vulgar, a scrape: BYRON, in Moore's Life, Vol. III. p. 41 (1832).

1820 in this dilemma we made a virtue of necessity: T. S. HUGHES, Trav. in Sicily, Vol. i. ch. ii. p. 39. 1830 he made every possible exertion to extricate us from the appalling dilemma with which we were now threatened: E. BLAQUIERE, Tr. Sig. Pananti, p. 66 (2nd Ed.).

dochmius, pl. dochmii, sb. : Lat. fr. Gk. δόχμιος (ποὺς), 'slanting (foot)': a compound measure used in Greek lyric verse of which the normal type resembles an iambus followed by a cretic, ---, but which presents nearly thirty varieties owing to resolution of the long syllables into two short syllables each, and the lengthening of the short syllables. It is explained as an iambic tripod with syncope of the middle iambic, or as a bacchius (---) followed by a catalectic trochee (a long syllable followed by a pause) and preceded by anacrusis. The latter explanation seems to be fashionable at present.

1830 Of the two dochmii which are usually conjoined in one verse, it is not necessary that each should finish with a whole word, but the words are often divided, and generally too so that they may terminate either in the first syllable of the second dochmius or the penultimate of the first: J. SEAGER, Tr. Hermann's Metres, Bk. II. ch. xxi. p. 55.

drāma, pl. drāmata (in Eng. dramas), sb.: Late Lat. fr. Gk. δρᾶμα, = 'something acted', 'a play'.

1. a stage-play, a composition written for the stage, or as if for the stage (cabinet-drama).

1616 I cannot for the stage a Drama lay...but thou writ'st the play: B. JONSON, Epigr., 112, Wks., p. 805 (1616). 1641 The scripture also affords us a divine pastoral drama in the Song of Solomon: MILTON, Ck. Govt., Bk. II. Pref., Wks., Vol. I. p. 120 (1806). 1670 Then the several Opera's or Musical Dramata are acted and sung with rare Cost and Art: R. LASSELLS, Voy. Ital., Pt. I. p. 140 (1698). bef. 1733 no preconceived Drama could maintain and pursue its Fable and tend to its final Catastrophe, more regular and naturally than all these matters did to destroy King Charles II.: R. NORTH, Examen, I. ii. 28, p. 44 (1740). 1754 these excellent musical dramas: LORD CHESTERFIELD, in World, No. 98, Misc. Wks., Vol. I. p. 164 (1777). 1820 fancy could call back the phantoms of a splendid drama which was past: T. S. HUGHES, Trav. in Sicily, Vol. I. ch. iii. p. 106. *1878 Mr. Joseph Mackay's new drama, to be produced at the Park theatre: Lloyd's Wkly., May 19, p. 5/3. [St.]

2. theatrical representation in the abstract; the literature of plays in the abstract.

bef. 1637 I am told his drollery yields to none the English drama did ever produce: MIDDLETON, Mayor Queen, Wks., Vol. II. p. 3 (1885). 1711 the received rules of the Drama: Spectator, No. 13, Mar. 15, p. 24/2 (Morley). 1727 we should not wholly omit the Drama, which makes so great and so lucrative a part of Poetry: POPE, Art of Sinking, ch. xvi. Wks., Vol. VI. p. 219 (1757). 1731 If these Characters were not written in the Genius of the Drama, rather to excite Terror or Laughter than to give a true History of Things: MEDLEY, Tr. Kolben's Cape Good Hope, Vol. I. p. 37. *1876 the Musical Drama: Echo, June 2. [St.]

3. a course of action and suffering in real life analogous to the progress of a play.

drāmatis personae, phr.: Late Lat.: characters of a play, characters of a story, characters of a drama of real life (see drama 3).

1739 Our astonishment at their absurdity you can never conceive; we had enough to do to express it by screaming an hour louder than the whole dramatis personae: GRAY, Letters, No. xx. Vol. I. p. 40 (1819). 1762 practising a play we are to act here this Christmas holidays—all the Dramatis Personae are of the English: STERNE, Letters, Wks., p. 754/2 (1839). 1771 The ancient dramatis personae are dead: HOR. WALPOLE, Letters, Vol. V. p. 279 (1857). 1787 In this he resembles a greater genius of our own, who makes but an indifferent figure in the dramatis personae of the sixteenth century: P. BACKFORD, Lett. fr. Ital., Vol. I. p. 33 (1805). 1806 I was within an ace of leaping on the stage, and knocking down all the rest of the Dramatis Personae: BERNARD, Miseries, Vol. I. p. 92 (5th Ed.). 1810 Then his characters are all selected from the most common dramatis personae of poetry: Edin. Rev., Vol. 16, p. 270. 1819 how is it possible for an author to introduce his persona dramatis to his readers in a more interesting and effectual manner: SCOTT, Bride of Lammermoor, ch. I. Wks., Vol. I. p. 969/1 (1867). 1842 the eventual destination of his dramatis personae: BARRHAM, Ingolds. Leg., p. 238 (1865). *1875 Echo, Sept. 14. (1698). 1676 Come to an esclaircissement, as I said: WYCHERLEY, Plain-Dealer, iv. p. 57 (1681). 1688 since you have not yet understood him, till he has made an esclaircissement of his love to you: — Countr. Wife, iii. p. 31. 1693 I may take off all mistakes and prejudices by a free esclaircissement of particulars: EVLYN, Corresp., Vol. III. p. 333 (1872). 1702 an Esclaircissement manag'd with Prudence, often prevents Misfortunes: VANBRUGH, False Friend, I. Wks., Vol. I. p. 118 (1776). 1709 Hernando would not suffer Louisa to reply, least the Esclaircissement of the double Marriage should be a double Scandal to him: MRS. MANLEY, New Atal., Vol. I. p. 237 (and Ed.). 1730 a friend of ours told me of your epistolary éclaircissement with POPE: FENTON, in Pope's Wks., Vol. VIII. p. 157 (1879). bef. 1733 The Chief Justice made a short Esclaircissement how this might very well happen: R. NORTH, Examen, II. iv. 41. p. 251 (1740). — Esclaircissement: ib., 108. p. 286. 1751 that if ever two people, who love one another, come to breaking, it is for want of a timely esclaircissement: GRAY, Letters, No. lxxix. Vol. I. p. 165 (1819). 1779 The French will not like the esclaircissement of the Court-martial, by which it is clear they were beaten and fled: HOR. WALPOLE, Letters, Vol. VII. p. 179 (1858). 1782 the king gave to his Grace, the Duke of Bedford, express instructions to come to an esclaircissement upon the point with the French ministry: J. ADAMS, Wks., Vol. III. p. 331 (1856). 1819 His anxious solicitations that the Master would stay to receive his kinsman, were of course readily complied with, since the esclaircissement which had taken place at the Mermaden's Fountain had removed all wish for sudden departure: SCOTT, Bride of Lammermoor, ch. XX. Wks., Vol. I. p. 1039/2 (1867). 1880 a surprising and not very probable esclaircissement takes place: Edin. Rev., Vol. 51. p. 455. 1848 when the esclaircissement comes there will be a scene: THACKERAY, Van. Fair, Vol. I. ch. xv. p. 169 (1879).

éclaireur, sb.: Fr.: scout.

*1877 General Gourkko's éclaireurs came on a fortified position: Echo, July 20. [St.]

éclat, sb.: Fr., 'burst', 'explosion', 'flash', 'lustre', 'up-roar'.

1. noise, brilliant effect, sensation, effective display.

1699 who made a great éclat about town by his splendid equipage: EVLYN, Diary, Vol. II. p. 366 (1872). 1741 After the affair of Pindenisium, an exploit of more éclat and importance: MIDDLETON, Cicero, II. vii. p. 196 (3rd Ed.). 1745 an éclat on this unhappy occasion was hurtful to both: In J. H. Jesse's Geo. Selwyn & Contemporaries, Vol. I. p. 78 (1882). 1771 In order to give it the more éclat, every table is to be furnished with sweetmeats and nosegays: SMOLLETT, Humph. Cl., p. 21/2 (1882). 1815 the truth might burst upon them with greater éclat, from the effect of the contrast: J. SCOTT, Visit to Paris, App., p. 327 (2nd Ed.). 1837 and a signal was made to the huntsman to wind his horn, by way of completing the éclat of his reception: Souvenir, Vol. I. p. 26/1. 1884 it was received at its first incoming with a kind of éclat: J. SHARMAN, Curry Hist. of Swearing, ch. ix. p. 185.

2. brilliant success, distinction.

1744 The campaign is not open yet, but...will disclose at once with great éclat: HOR. WALPOLE, Letters, Vol. I. p. 300 (1857). 1754 resolving to make his first medical appearance in London with some éclat: SMOLLETT, Ferd. Ct.

Fathom, ch. lii. Wks., Vol. iv. p. 307 (1817). 1777 The acquisition of Philadelphia would give Howe a temporary éclat: J. ADAMS, Wks., Vol. ix. p. 459 (1854). 1808 gaining a little paltry éclat, without the remotest possibility of assisting the common cause by the attempt: Edin. Rev., Vol. 13, p. 232. 1816 The difficulties of continuing or discontinuing acquaintance, of avoiding éclat, were enough to occupy her: J. AUSTEN, Emma, Vol. i. p. 122 (1833). 1839 and never did he acquit himself with more éclat: MISS PARDOE, Beauties of the Bosph., p. 161. 1850 she...had starred the provinces with great éclat: THACKERAY, Pendennis, Vol. i. ch. xix. p. 202 (1879). 1853 the Session closed with éclat by a speech of Palmerston's in his most flashy and successful style: GREVILLE, Memoirs, 3rd Ser., i. iii. 80.

3. notoriety, flashy brilliance, exposure.

1672 the éclat of the Court gallantry: EVELYN, Corresp., Vol. iv. p. 31 (1872). 1751 she is past the glare and éclat of youth: LORD CHESTERFIELD, Letters, Vol. ii. No. 35, p. 154 (1774). 1781 The names of most éclat in the Opposition are two names to which those walls have been much accustomed at the same period: HOR. WALPOLE, Letters, Vol. viii. p. 120 (1858). 1799 a step that will give more éclat to the business than I think it deserves: J. ADAMS, Wks., Vol. ix. p. 20 (1854). 1811 men of fashion are thought by many ladies to give éclat to vice: L. M. HAWKINS, Countess, Vol. i. p. 64 (2nd Ed.). 1823 The reason's obvious: if there's an éclat, they lose their caste at once, as do the Parias: BYRON, Don Juan, xii. lxxviii. 1824 his success in such a pursuit would give a ridiculous éclat to the whole affair: SCOTT, Redgauntlet, ch. ii. p. 163 (1886). 1830 in 1778 he acquired extraordinary éclat by the seduction of the Marchioness of Carmarthen: J. GALT, Life of Byron, p. 9. 1879 secured from the éclat of a disgraceful bankruptcy: MRS. OLIPHANT, Within the Precincts, ch. iv. p. 40.

4. lustre, renown.

1748 Consider what lustre and éclat it will give you...to be the best scholar, of a gentleman, in England: LORD CHESTERFIELD, Letters, Vol. i. No. 140, p. 351 (1774). 1759 the éclat of his victories: E. W. MONTAGU, Anc. Rep., p. 135. 1792 This perpetual parade of sanctity gave him such an éclat and unmeasurable credit: H. BROOKE, Fool of Qual., Vol. iii. p. 72. 1809 So free was he from being elated with the éclat of his wonderful arms, and so far from thinking of higher things than how to defend himself: MATV, Tr. Riesbeck's Trav. Germ., Let. li. Pinkerton, Vol. vi. p. 190. 1811 scarcely hold out against the superior fashion and éclat of the Established Church: Edin. Rev., Vol. 19, p. 160.

éclatant, fem. -ante, adj.: Fr.: effective, noisy, brilliant, causing éclat.

bef. 1744 Certain it is, that something extraordinary and éclatant must be done: POPE, Wks., Vol. viii. p. 364 (1872).

eclipsis: mistake for ellipsis (q. v.).

Ecnephias: Lat. fr. Gk. ἐκνεφίας: a hurricane, supposed to be caused by meeting clouds.

1601 a whirle-puffe or ghuist called Typhon (i.) the storme Ecnephias aforesaid, sent out with a winding violence: HOLLAND, Tr. Plin. N. H., Bk. 2, ch. 48, Vol. i. p. 24. 1727 The circling Typhon, whirld from point to point, Exhausting all the rage of all the sky, And dire Ecnephias reign: THOMSON, Summer, 986 (1834). 1731 were often in Danger from the Ecnephias, as the Naturalists call it, or the Travado-Wind, very frequent between the Tropicks: MEDLEY, Tr. Kolben's Cape Good Hope, Vol. i. p. 11.

écorché, sb.: Fr., 'flayed (figure)': a representation in painting or sculpture of an animal figure with the skin removed.

1854 if you will have the kindness to look by the écorché there, you will see that little packet which I have left for you: THACKERAY, Newcomes, Vol. ii. ch. xl. p. 415 (1879).

ecphônêsis, pl. ecphônêsas, sb.: Late Lat. fr. Gk. ἐκφώνησις, = 'exclamation': Rhet.: the effective use of an exclamation or interrogation.

1589 Ecphonisis. or the Outcry: PUTTENHAM, Eng. Poet., iii. xix. p. 221 (1869).

écrasé, fem. -ée, part.: Fr.: crushed, ruined, humiliated. Sometimes used as vb.

1779 we have not heard yet how many people were écrasés: In J. H. Jesse's Geo. Selwyn & Contemporaries, Vol. iv. p. 30 (1882). 1848 she écrasée all rival charmers: THACKERAY, Van. Fair, Vol. ii. ch. xvi. p. 177 (1879).

1854 the cigar-boxes given over to this friend, the écrin of diamonds to that, et cætera: THACKERAY, Newcomes, Vol. ii. ch. xxi. p. 254 (1879).

écru, adj.: Fr.: unbleached, raw.

1850 Mantelets...composed of...écru silk: Harper's Mag., Vol. ii. p. 720.

ecstasis, sb.: Late Lat. fr. Gk. ἐκστασις, = 'standing out', 'removal from the proper place': distraction, entrancement, astonishment, ecstasy, as in Late Gk. Often wrongly spelt extasis, perhaps after Fr. extase.

? 1582 with vnordinat extasis hamperd: R. STANYHURST, Tr. Virgil's Aen., Bk. iii. p. 80 (1880). 1604 Which words being uttered Julia began to stammer and to change countenance, falling into an extasis, and so leessing her voice, remained dumme until she died: R. PARSONS, Rev. Ten Publ. Disp., Pref., p. 30. 1621 another called bauge, like in effect to opium, which puts them for a time into a kinde of extasis, and makes them gently to laugh: R. BURTON, Anat. Mel., Pt. 2, Sec. 5, Mem. 1, Subs. 5, Vol. ii. p. 130 (1827). 1658 if any have been so happy as truly to understand Christian annihilation, extasis, exolution, liquefaction: SIR TH. BROWN, Hydriolaph., p. 83.

ecthlipsis, sb.: Late Lat. fr. Gk. ἐκθλιψις, = 'a squeezing out': Lat. Prosod.: the elision of a final m with the preceding vowel before the following word if it has an initial vowel.

écu, escu (Cotgr.), sb.: Fr., 'shield': name of old French gold and silver coins; often translated 'crown'; the sum of five (formerly three) francs.

bef. 1593 the stately Catholics | Send Indian gold to coin me French ecus: MARLOWE, Massacre at Paris, Wks., p. 228/2 (1858). 1673 Then they dry it and carry it by sea to Marseilles where they sell it at 8 escus the Milliere: Every Milliere consists of 10 Packieres; every Packiere of 100 Manados or handfuls: J. RAY, Journ. Low Countr., p. 480. 1886 a gentleman would find himself lodged and fed comfortably enough for 150 écus a year: E. B. HAMILTON, in Eng. Hist. Rev., Apr., p. 271.

eczema, sb.: Late Lat. fr. Late Gk. ἐκζεμα, = 'a pustule': an inflammatory disease of the skin with morbid secretion of lymph and redness of the skin or pustules.

edax rerum, phr.: Lat.: devourer of (all) things; devouring (all) things. The epithet is applied to time, Ovid, Met., 15, 234.

1608 that, that Æculapius, were he now extant, could not heal, or edax rerum take away: MIDDLETON, Family of Love, v. 3, Wks., Vol. iii. p. 110 (1885). 1651 at last Time, which is edax rerum, shall first digest all fears and discords: EVELYN, Corresp., Vol. iii. p. 60 (1872). 1870 Time, which in all other places is called Edax rerum, may here be called Bibax rerum, having sup'd up here a whole Town: R. LASSELS, Voy. Ital., Pt. ii. p. 193 (1698).

Edda: Iceland., lit. 'great-grandmother': name of the collection of old Icelandic poems made early in the twelfth century, and also of the later prose version of the same.

1757 I told you before that (in a time of dearth) I would borrow from the Edda, without entering too minutely on particulars: GRAY, Letters, No. xcix. Vol. ii. p. 27 (1819). 1780 I shall borrow a few lines of this poem, which are mentioned in the Edda among the Hringaketti, and that prove how far these poets went in their Antonomias: Tr. Von Troil's Lett. on Iceland, p. 201 (2nd Ed.). 1788 The contest concerning the antiquity of the later Edda is equally ridiculous: Gent. Mag., LVIII. i. 137/2. 1818 Among many other classical works, it [Geyser] occurs in the Edda, towards the close of the ancient and sublime poem: E. HENDERSON, Iceland, Vol. i. p. 42. 1830 A good many parts of the Edda have, most likely, arisen in the land of the Cherusci: MACDOWALL-ANSON, Asgard & the Gods, p. 18.

Edelweiss, sb.: Ger.: name of an Alpine flowering plant, Leontopodium alpinum, found at a high altitude, and in places difficult to reach on the Alps and Pyrenees. It is a small downy plant, with white downy involucre, much prized for its rarity and peculiar appearance.

1877 Esme having remarked at dinner that she did not possess a specimen of the edelweiss, at breakfast-time next morning she found a bouquet of the same upon her plate: L. W. M. LOCKHART, Mine is Thine, ch. xix. p. 179 (1879).

edema: Late Lat. See oedema.

Eden: Heb. Eden, lit. 'delight': in Hebrew mythology, name of the delightful 'garden' in which our first parents lived before the Fall; hence, any delightful place or district. Also, name of a region in Biblical geography, perhaps in N.W. Mesopotamia.

1665 I think never man could boast it, without the Precincts of Paradise; but He, that came to gain us a better Eden than we lost: GLANVILLE, Secepis, ch. xiv. p. 95 (1885). 1813 Caught by the laughing tides that lave | These Edens of the eastern wave: BYRON, Glaour, Wks., Vol. ix. p. 148 (1832). 1864 To a sweet little Eden on earth that I know, | A mountain islet pointed and peak'd: TENNYSON, Islet, 14. 1877 Edens, the gates of which no flaming swords nor 'watch of winged Hydra' guard: L. W. M. LOCKHART, Mine is Thine, ch. ii. p. 11 (1879). 1880 In summer the inhabitants may be almost said to migrate from their houses into these miniature Edens: J. PAVN, Confident Agent, ch. i. p. 2.

edepol, interj.: Lat.: verily, truly. The letters -pol are for the vocative of Pollux.

1621 Away with your pishery pashery, your pols and your edipols: Shoemakers Holy-day. [Nares] edile: Eng. fr. Lat. See œdile.

editio princeps, phr.: Late Lat.: original edition, first printed edition.

1815 The room of the Editiones principes [pl.], contains every thing to gratify the taste of the bibliographer: J. SCOTT, Visit to Paris, p. 237 (2nd Ed.). 1885 The first part deals mainly with the editiones principes: Athenaeum, Oct. 24, p. 530/1. 1887 The issue of this editio princeps is strictly limited to 125 copies: R. C. BROWN, in Academy, Apr. 9, p. 250/1.

édition de luxe, phr.: Fr., 'edition of luxury': a handsomely and expensively got up edition, a fancy edition.

1819 But the paper used for printing, except in what are emphatically called the éditions de luxe, is very inferior to ours: Edin. Rev., Vol. 38, p. 377. 1883 A few months ago the Defendants advertised an édition de luxe, in two volumes, entitled, "The Life, Letters, and Uncollected Works of William Makepeace Thackeray": Standard, Dec. 21, p. 5. 1888 The volume may fairly claim to be, in a modest way, an édition de luxe: Athenaeum, July 25, p. 111/2.

editor (L = E), sb.: Eng., as if fr. Lat. editor, = 'producer', 'exhibitor': one who edits or produces editions.

1. one who prepares a copy of another person's literary work for publication or republication (with or without notes or comments).

1649 some interloper may perhaps underhand fall upon the work at a lower rate, and undo the first editor: Bp. HALL, Cases of Cons., Dec. 1, Case 5. [R.] 1713 Our Party-Authors will also afford me a great Variety of Subjects, not to mention Editors, Commentators, and others: Spectator, No. 457, Aug. 14, p. 655/1 (Morley). bef. 1794 Professor Breiting of Zurich, the learned editor of a Septuagint Bible: GIBSON, Life & Lett., p. 45 (1869). 1818 They stand forth marshall'd in a handsome troop, | To meet the ingenious youth of future ages, | Till some less rigid editor shall stoop | To call them back into their separate cages: BYRON, Don Juan, l. xlv.

2. one who prepares a magazine, journal, or review for publication, and who procures contributions for the same.

1807 a letter to the Editor of his favourite Magazine: BERRISFORD, Miseries, Vol. II, p. 185 (5th Ed.).

educator (L = E), sb.: Eng. fr. Lat. educator, noun of agent to educare, = 'to rear', 'bring up', 'train': one who brings up, one who rears, an instructor, a trainer.

bef. 1716 the Educators of Youth: SOUTH, Serm., Vol. v, p. 27 (1727).

eemaum: Arab. See imaum.

eezar: Arab. See izar.

efface (E = U), vb.: Eng. fr. effacer: to destroy the face or appearance of, to erase, obliterate.

1611 Effacer. To efface, deface, raise, blot, rub out, wipe out; to abolish: COTGR. 1666 having...effaced the name of Kings out of the inscription: EVELYN, Corresp., Vol. IV, p. 314 (1872). bef. 1744 Judge we by Nature? Habit can efface, | Int'rest o'ercome, or Policy take place: POPP, Mor. Essays, l. 166.

effatum, pl. effata, sb.: Lat.: solemn utterance, prediction, axiom.

1677 And wherein is the indecorum of it, that both these effata should proceed from the same mouth: JOHN HOWE, Wks., p. 118/2 (1834). 1736 one of the sacred effata and dictates which I pronounce to you: ib., p. 540/1. 1809 In many of the more modern works, the sentences are all separate, like the separate effata of an oracle: MATY, Tr. Riesbeck's Trav. Germ., Let. viii. Pinkerton, Vol. VI, p. 24.

effector (E = L), sb.: Eng., as if noun of agent to Lat. efficere, = 'to effect': one who or that which effects or causes. A variant spelling of effector.

1626 Effector. Which hath done a thing: COCKERAM, Pt. I. (2nd Ed.). bef. 1735 We commemorate the creation, and pay worship to that infinite Being who was the effector of it: DERHAM, [J.]

effectrix, sb.: quasi-Lat., fem. of effector (q. v.): a female who effects.

1611 Effectrix. An effectrix; she that causeth, procureth, or bringeth to passe: COTGR. 1626 Effectrix. She which hath done some thing: COCKERAM, Pt. I. (2nd Ed.).

effendi, sb.: Turk. efendi, fr. Gk. αὐθιρῆς: master, gentleman; a title of respect equivalent to our 'Mr.' or 'Sir', but coming after the proper name when that is used.

1704 Here are also several Effendies, or Masters of Learning, who daily Expound out of the Alcoran: J. PITTS, Acc. Moham., p. 101. 1717 I had the advantage of lodging three weeks at Belgrade, with a principal effendi, that is to say, a scholar: LADY M. W. MONTAGU, Letters, p. 129 (1827). 1743 a Turkish Effendi, or priest: R. NORTH, Lives of Norths, Vol. II, p. 374 (1826). 1830 giving themselves the title of Effendia, they possess all the arrogance and pride, which generally belong to the upstart favourites of fortune: E. BLAQUIERE, Tr. Sig. Pananti, p. 166 (2nd Ed.). 1839 and the serjeant said to him, Answer the summons of the Effendee: E. W. LANE, Tr. Arab. Nts., Vol. II, ch. xi, p. 268. 1884 this stranger was an Effendi in Government employ: F. BOYLE, Borderland, p. 36.

Effeta: Heb. See Ephphatha.

effigies, pl. effigies, sb.: Lat.: likeness, representation, portrait; esp. on a monumental structure, a coin, or a medal. The Eng. effigy (1625 Sir W. Neve, in Court & Times of Chas. I., Vol. I, p. 3, Ed. 1848), effigie, are fr. Fr. effigie.

1600 as mine eye doth his effigies witness | Most truly limn'd and living in your face: SHAKS., As Y. L. It., II, 7, 193. 1641 The effigies of another Bain. Mar. not so easie to be removed as the former: JOHN FRENCH, Art

Greece*, p. 261. 1780 there is one remarkable anecdote breathing the full effluvia of the age: HOR. WALPOLE, Letters, Vol. VII, p. 351 (1858). 1786 the ghouls on all sides protruded their noses, to inhale the effluvia which the carcasses of the woodmen began to emit: Tr. Beckford's Valhek, p. 120 (1883). 1806 for nature has as if for its protection denied the fawn the property of leaving any effluvia upon his track, a property so powerful in the old deer: Amer. State Papers, Ind. Affairs, Vol. IV, p. 734 (1832). 1820 The noxious effluvia which he breathes: T. S. HUGHES, Trav. in Sicily, Vol. I, ch. I, p. 33. 1830 the effluvia proceeding from the lion, becomes sufficiently strong to indicate its being close at hand: E. BLAQUIERE, Tr. Sig. Pananti, p. 131 (2nd Ed.). 1845 Frequently, when passing at the distance of half a mile to leeward of a herd, I have perceived the whole air tainted with the effluvia: C. DARWIN, Journ. Beagle, ch. III, p. 49. 1886 His experiments tend to show that the effluvia (electric or otherwise) produces the same effects as the ultra-violet rays: Athenaeum, Apr. 17, p. 585/1.

effronterie, sb.: Fr.: shamelessness, impudent assurance. Anglicised as effrontery (1715 Kersey).

1758 Pet-in-l'air, may suit very well with French effronterie: for if the ladies of that country make no scruple of watering their ruelles before the gentlemen who attend their leves, I see no reason why they should be ashamed of... but we could wish that they had found a name of a little more delicacy for this garment: Ann. Reg., I. Humble Remonstrance, &c., p. 374/2.

Efreet(eh): Arab. See Afreet.

égalité, sb.: Fr.: equality. Early Anglicised as egalitee (Chaucer).

1794 I hope my old friend will never meet the fate of another preacher of egalité: J. ADAMS, Wks., Vol. I, p. 462 (1858). 1828 but is not this the land of egalité: Engl. in France, Vol. II, p. 27.

égarement, pl. égarements, sb.: Fr.: error, bewilderment, aberration.

bef. 1733 All Alarms and Frights were useful to increase the Egarments of the People: R. NORTH, Examen, I, ii, 174, p. 121 (1740). 1748 Having thus confessed some of my égarements, I will now show you a little of my right side: LORD CHESTERFIELD, Letters, Vol. I, No. 133, p. 325 (1774). 1807 in some unhappy moment of égarement,...you have used another Lady's complexion! BERRISFORD, Miseries, Vol. II, p. 52 (5th Ed.). 1838 I never, therefore, talked to the duchess about our ancient égarements: LORD LYTTON, Pelham, ch. XXVII, p. 78 (1859).

Egeria, name of a nymph of Roman legend, who instructed Numa Pompilius, the second king of Ancient Rome; representative of a source of wise inspiration.

1621 I was not a little offended with this malady, shall I say my mistress melancholy, my Egeria, or my matus genius: R. BURTON, Anat. Mel., To Reader, p. 7 (1827). 1818 Why may not I have my Egeria or my demon, as well as another? LADY MORGAN, Fl. Macarthy, Vol. III. ch. ii. p. 82 (1819). 1836 It is in these moments that we gaze upon the moon. It is in these moments that Nature becomes our Egeria: LORD BRACONSFIELD, Viv. Grey, Bk. III. ch. vi. p. 109 (1881). 1890 With the help and counsel of Beatrice, who turns his Egeria, he wins fame in law and politics: Athenaeum, May 24, p. 670/2.

emphasis*, s. fr.: Lat. fr. Gk. ἐμφασις. Anglicised as emphasy (1681 Blount).

1. stress of utterance whereby a syllable, a word, a clause, or a sentence is uttered so as to attract special attention.

1575 And in your verses remembre to place euery worde in his natural Emphasis or sound, that is to say, in such wise and with such length or shortnesse, elevation or depression of sillables: G. GASKOIGNE, in Haslewood's Eng. Poets & Poetry, Vol. II. p. 9 (1815). 1722 if...the Emphasis laid on the Words is Wrong, the Sense is Obscur'd: RICHARDSON, Status, &c., in Italy, p. 90.

2. special stress of utterance intended to produce impressiveness. Originally rhetorical emphasis was defined as the suggestion that more was meant than was expressed.

bef. 1627 You're welcome, mistress, as I may speak it, | But my lord will give 't a sweeter emphasis: MIDDLETON, Anything for Quiet Life, iii. 1, Wks., Vol. v. p. 284 (1885). 1728 Her voice was sweet, strong, piercing, and melodious: her pronunciation voluble, distinct, and musical; and her emphasis always placed where the spirit of the sense, in her periods, only demanded it: CIBBER, Vanbrugh's Prov. Husb., To Reader, Wks., Vol. II. p. 233 (1776). 1884 he would recite, with the sonorous emphasis of the late John Kemble: G. A. SALA, Quite Alone, Vol. I. ch. iv. p. 66.

3. forcibility of expression, force and depth of meaning.

1586 yet notwithstanding it seemeth that this word Magnanimittie carieth with it some greater and more particular Empasis [sic]: T. B., Tr. La Primaud. Fr. Acad., p. 273 (1589). 1601 The Jesuits nevertheless gave out with great Emphasis that those men themselves were the Libellers: A. C., Answ. to Let. of a Jesuited Gent., p. 113. 1603 but for the greater emphasis and representation as it were to the life of that which they meane to deliver: HOLLAND, Tr. Phil. Mor., p. 800. 1604 What is he whose grief | Bears such an emphasis? SHAKS., Ham., v. 1, 278. 1652 Words so big with Emphasis, as they hardly admit of a Translation: N. CULVERWEL, Light of Nat., Treat., p. 5. bef. 1738 But mark the emphasis of that Yet—: R. NORTH, Examen, I. ii. 81, p. 72 (1740). 1876 It is scarcely possible for language to surpass in emphasis the expressions which we have cited from the speech: Times, Dec. 7. [St.]

4. metaph. special intensity, superlative degree, particularly in the old phrase with an emphasis, = 'in a superlative degree', 'pre-eminently'.

1573—80 We began to reckon up the veri causis in deed, which he knew fully as wel as mi self, with a good larg emphasis, I warrant you: GAB. HARVEY, Lett. Bk., p. 32 (1884). 1598 swearing with an emphasis: B. JONSON, Ev. Man in his Hum., iii. 5, Wks., p. 39 (1616). 1655 I might say, And with an emphasis: MASSINGER, Guardian, I. 1, Wks., p. 344/1 (1839). 1665 Aloes which it [Socotra Isle] hath with an emphasis: SIR TH. HERBERT, Trav., p. 34 (1677). [— Snakes...we saw abundance of, but more especially Lions, Wolves, Foxes, Wild-Cats, Boars and Tygres; which last, a Roman Poet mentions with an Emphasis: ib., p. 181.]

emphysema*, s. fr.: Late Lat. fr. Gk. ἐμφύσημα, = 'an inflation' (of the stomach, abdomen, &c.): distention of the body with air or gas; esp. a presence of air or gas in cellular tissue.

1788 The emphysema here described was the consequence of a fractured rib in a labouring man: Gent. Mag., LVIII. i. 148/2.

emphyteusis, s. fr.: Late Lat. fr. Gk. ἐμψύτευσις, lit. 'an implanting': Roman Law: a granting of lands or houses in perpetuity or for a long term upon condition of the estate being improved and a small yearly rent paid to the grantor or his successors by the grantee or his successors.

1696 PHILLIPS, World of Words. 1887 One would gladly have spared... the explanation of emphyteusis: Athenaeum, Apr. 23, p. 542/3.

emplacement, sb.: Fr.: a site, a situation (of a building or other object). Anglicised in the sense of 'location', and as a technical term in fortification.

1836 To-day all Paris flocked to see... the great Luxor obelisk placed on its pedestal... It was very interesting to engineers, but the Luxor is ugly and too small for the emplacement: H. GREVILLE, Diary, p. 102. 1836 Had... Napoleon been in possession of such an emplacement, ten times the sum voted... would have been spent: Edin. Rev., Vol. 63, p. 222. 1841 His instructions as to its emplacement were so correct, that the servants found it instantly: LADY BLESSINGTON, Idler in France, Vol. II, p. 184.

emplecton, emplectum, sb.: Lat. fr. Gk. ἐμπλεκτον, lit. 'inwoven': a kind of masonry in which the outer faces of the wall are ashlar in regular courses, the interval being filled in with rubble with occasional ties of stone from one place to the other; also, masonry in which blocks of stone are laid some lengthwise, some endwise, on a regular system.

employé, fem. employée, sb.: Fr.: one who is employed, one who works for wages for employer of labor. Sometimes Anglicised as employee. The first two syllables of the Fr. form are frequently assimilated with those of Eng. employer.

1822 they become soldiers or lawyers, who... increase the locust swarms of employés: Edin. Rev., Vol. 36, p. 340. 1828 he must have been some old employé: Engl. in France, Vol. II, p. 68. 1840 Employés see the great man's servants that they may secure friends at court: FRASER, Koordinaten, &c., Vol. I, Let. xii, p. 291. 1872 Employers... will raise wages in order to retain the services of their employés: M. G. FAWCETT, Polit. Econ., Sect. III, ch. II, p. 109 (1874).

emporium, Lat. pl. emporia, sb.: Lat. fr. Gk. ἐμπόριον, = 'trading-place', 'mart'. Anglicised in 17 c. as empory.

1. a market-place, an exchange for merchandize, a bazaar, a mart; applied grandiloquently to large shops or stores.

1600 The temples likewise of Isis and Serapis were in the Bursae called Emporium: HOLLAND, Tr. Livy (Summ. Mar., Bk. III, ch. xii), p. 1367. 1645 the strange vanity of the several nations... negotiating in this famous Emporium: EVELYN, Diary, Vol. I, p. 211 (1872). 1665 Gold and other rich lading was... conveyed by the Sledge and Camels... to Coptos the usual Emporium: SIR TH. HERBERT, Trav., p. 38 (1677). 1840 an Oriental emporium of wealth and magnificence: FRASER, Koordinaten, &c., Vol. I, Let. viii, p. 217.

2. a centre of trade, a port, city, or town with an extensive commerce.

1621 those emporiums which are by the sea side, general staples, marts, as Antwerp, Venice, Bergen of old, London, &c.: R. BURTON, Anat. Mel., To Reader, p. 88 (1827). 1665 'Twixt this city and Derbent is that noted Emporium some call Arash: SIR TH. HERBERT, Trav., p. 190 (1677). 1682 London, thou great emporium of our isle: DRYDEN, Medal, 167. 1775 under the Romans Ephesus was accounted the most considerable emporium of Asia within Taurus: R. CHANDLER, Trav. Asia Minor, p. 129. 1797 In order that Government might obtain a control over this trade, that London might become its emporium, and that Great Britain might have the advantage of levying a duty upon the consumption of Europe of Indian articles, the Company were obliged to give 3000 tons, to be increased, when necessary, to the private trade: WELLINGTON, Suppl. Desp., Vol. I, p. 39 (1858). 1820 an emporium that might almost have vied with the Athenian Piræus: T. S. HUGHES, Trav. in Sicily, Vol. I, ch. I, p. 22. 1826 Tombuctoo and Jeuné became the grand emporium: Edin. Rev., Vol. 44, p. 210.

empresa, Sp.; empresse, Eng. fr. Sp. sb.: a motto. See impresa.

1603 but Plutarch considering well how ill this Empresse sounded, being taken in that sense and construction which they give unto it: HOLLAND, Tr. Plut. Mor., p. 605. bef. 1651 Thy name as my empresa will I bear: DRAYTON, Malinda. [Nares] empresé, fem. empresée, adj.: Fr.: impressively cordial, eager to display interest, good-will, or civility.

1837 exceedingly empresées in their manner towards the Great Unknown: J. F. COOPER, Europe, Vol. II, p. 42. 1877 be low, be depressed, but, at the right moment, empresé and earnest: L. W. M. LOCKHART, Mine is Thine, ch. xvii, p. 160 (1879).

empressement, sb.: Fr.

1. eagerness.

1754 I have not much empressement to give the detail of it to anybody else: HOR. WALPOLE, Letters, Vol. II, p. 384 (1857).

2. eagerness of manner, impressiveness, conspicuous display of interest, good-will, or civility.

1709 the Empressment, Diligence and Warmth of a beginning Lover: MRS. MANLEY, New Atal., Vol. II, p. 57 (2nd Ed.). 1769 gave me a ridiculous account of the empressement and homage of the Countess: HOR. WALPOLE, Letters, Vol. V, p. 194 (1857). 1808 disinterestedness and probity show no empressement: Edin. Rev., Vol. 13, p. 92. 1813 I hope Lord Oldborough did not conceive that there was any want of empressement on my part:

M. EDGEWORTH, Patronage, Vol. II, p. 140 (1833). 1837 who, observing the empressement of her hostess, through the vista of rooms, had rushed forward as fast as decorum would at all allow: J. F. COOPER, Europe, Vol. II, p. 186. 1838-9 He (Gladstone) received my advances with very great empressement indeed: MACAULAY, in Trevelyan's Life, Vol. II, p. 42 (1878). 1845 they are without empressement or prévenance and seem to care little whether you buy or not: FORD, Handbk. Spain, Pt. II, p. 731. 1877 Emmé, with somewhat suspicious empressement, hastened to tell her father: L. W. M. LOCKHART, Mine is Thine, ch. xxxii, p. 275 (1879).

Occasionally Anglicised as enigm(e), aenigm(e). The form (a)enigmaes has the English pl. s added to a false Lat. pl. (instead of aenigmata) on the analogy of certain Gk. neuter nouns in -a, which in Lat. become fem. and of the first declension.

1588 Armi. Some enigma, some riddle: come, thy l'envoy; begin. Cost. No egma, no riddle, no l'envoy: SHAKS., L. L. L., III. 72. 1589 If you find darke Enigmas or strange conceits as if Sphinx on the one side, and Roscius on the other were playing the waggos: GREENE, Menaphon, p. 4 (1880). 1589 speaking obscurely and in riddle called Enigma: PUTTENHAM, Eng. Poet., III. vii. p. 166 (1869). bef. 1593 if you conceive mine enigma, gentlemen, what shall I be? GREENE, Jas. IV., III. 2, Wks., p. 204/2 (1861). 1595 that they have forged arithmetical aenigmes: W. C., Polimanteia, sig. E 1 vo. 1603 her quick spirit in propounding, and her subtil wit and wisdom in assailing riddles and darke questions, such as be called Aenigmes: HOLLAND, Tr. Plut. Mor., p. 320. 1607 an Enigma or Riddle: TOPSELL, Four-f. Beasts, p. 17. 1607 if he have a Sphinx, I have an Edipus... This is such a knotty Enigma: A. BREWER, Lingua, III. 6, sig. G 1 vo. 1620 The sense was covered with divers enigmaes, in a Poetical Propheticall form, yet not so but that it was easily understood: BRENT, Tr. Soave's Hist. Conc. Trent, Bk. VII. p. 652 (1676). 1625 Heraclitus saith well, in one of his Enigmaes: Dry Light is ever the best: BACON, Ess., Friendship, p. 175 (1871). 1642 it [true affection] is a Body of Enigma's, Mysteries and Riddles: SIR TH. BROWN, Relig. Med., Pt. II. § vi. p. 37 (1686). 1685 those common Enigma's of Magnetism, Fluxes, Reflexes, and the like: GLANVILL, Sceptis, ch. II. p. 9 (1885). 1689 In effect 'tis a very dark Enigma: DRYDEN, Mock-Astrol., IV. Wks., Vol. I. p. 309 (1701). 1678 that vulgar Enigm or Riddle of Boys, concerning an Eunuch striking a Bat: CUDWORTH, Intell. Syst., Bk. I. ch. III. p. 107. 1711 Species of Wit... Allegories, Aenigmas, Mottos, Parables: Spectator, No. 62, May 11, p. 101/1 (Morley). 1744 His Immortality alone can solve | That darkest of Enigmas, human Hope: E. YOUNG, Night Thoughts, VII. p. 144 (1773). 1797 Every Spanish inscription and shopboard is an enigma: SOUTHEY, Lett. dur. Resid. in Spain, p. 97. 1806 life itself, according to our views of it, is one great enigma: BERESFORD, Miseries, Vol. I. p. 58 (5th Ed.). 1815 the solution or explanation of this riddle, enigma, or mystery: SCOTT, Guy Mannering, ch. xlii. p. 371 (1852). 1820 she propounded her enigmas to the unfortunate traveller: T. S. HUGHES, Trav. in Sicily, Vol. I. ch. xi. p. 323. 1864 'She's an enigma. She's a Sphinx.' "Is she demi-monde?" G. A. SALA, Quite Alone, Vol. I. ch. i. p. 10. *1878 There is evidently some strange enigma to be solved: Lloyd's Wkly., May 19, p. 712. [SL.]

enjambement, sb.: Fr.: the act or effect of beginning a clause in one verse, and ending it in the next; also, by extension, an analogous treatment of other things.

1883 Publishers may have their reasons for affecting the enjambement of volumes: Sat. Rev., Vol. 56, p. 472/2. 1886 In Marie Stuart and Jungfrau von Orleans anapestic substitution is very frequent, but enjambement and feminine ending are less used: MAYOR, Eng. Metre, p. 202. 1888 There are two awkward enjambements here [in the translation]: Athenaeum, Jan. 28, p. 111/1.

enjouement, enjoument, sb.: Fr.: sprightliness, playfulness.

1760 talks sentiments...interlarded with enjoument, and accompanied with some oblique odes: LORD CHESTERFIELD, Letters, Vol. II. No. 2, p. 5 (1774).

enlevé, part.: Fr.: carried away, carried off, kidnapped.

1837 His Majesty has been abducted, or spirited away, 'enlevé,' by some person or persons unknown: CARLYLE, Fr. Rev., II. iv. 227.

ennui, sb.: Fr.: annoying weariness of mind, painful listlessness and depression caused by lack of interesting objects and pursuits, boredom, tedium.

1742 The only fault of it is insipidity; which is apt now and then to give a sort of ennui: GRAY, Letters, No. lviii. Vol. I. p. 127 (1819). 1758 In less than a month, the man, used to business, found, that living like a gentleman was dying of ennui: LORD CHESTERFIELD, Letters, Vol. II. No. 105, p. 413 (1774). 1765 I certainly should not cross the sea in search of ennui, that I have in such perfection at home: HOR. WALPOLE, Letters, Vol. IV. p. 392 (1857). 1792 I am still free from languor and ennui: T. REID, Corresp., Wks., p. 30/2 (1846). 1806 Suddenly rousing yourself from the ennui of a solitary walk by striking your toe...against the sharp corner of a fixed flint: BERKEFORD, Miseries, Vol. I. p. 22 (5th Ed.). 1808 It was a scene of ennui and vapid dullness: H. MORE, Celebs in search of a Wife, Vol. II. ch. xxxvi. p. 102 (1809). 1809 ennui—that stagnation of life and feeling which results from the absence of all motives to exertion: Edin. Rev., Vol. 14, p. 377. 1820 that mental ennui which every species of diversion that consists in spectacle alone, must inevitably produce: T. S. HUGHES, Trav. in Sicily, Vol. I. ch. iii. p. 94. 1838 I made him think he should die of ennui if I did not accompany him: LORD LYTTON, Paul Clifford, p. 235 (1848). 1878 I want a variety of ennui: GEO. ELIOT, Dan Deronda, Bk. VI. ch. xlviii. p. 441.

ennuyé, fem. ennuyée, adj.: Fr.: bored, suffering from ennui. Also as sb., one whose capacity for being interested and for healthy enjoyment of life is enfeebled or destroyed by satiety.

1767 I am alone and ennuyé to the last degree: GRAY, in GRAY & MASON'S Corresp., p. 96 (1853). 1767 If she should...be very much ennuyé...you will be blamed for having persuaded her to come: In J. H. JESSE'S Geo. Selwyn & Contemporaries, Vol. II. p. 126 (1882). 1810 the witliest, the most selfish, and the most ennuyé of the whole party: JEFFREY, Essays, Vol. I. p. 244 (1844). 1813 I am ennuyé beyond my usual tense of that yawning verb: BYRON, in MOORE'S Life, Vol. II. p. 298 (1832). 1818 Delightful Ireland, where one is never safe and never ennuyé for a single moment: LADY MORGAN, Fl. MacCarthy, Vol. III. ch. I. p. 47 (1819). 1839 the constrained effort of the ennuyé man of the world: E. A. FOR, Wks., Vol. I. p. 120 (1884). 1849 He must be terribly ennuyé here: LORD BEACONSFIELD, Tancred, Bk. V. ch. vii. p. 394 (1881).

ennuyer, vb.: Fr.: to weary, to bore, to distress by being tedious or uninteresting.

1768 I have no occasion to ennuyer myself, though I cannot go to Almack's or the Opera: In J. H. JESSE'S Geo. Selwyn & Contemporaries, Vol. II. p. 314 (1882).

enormenty (= " = =), sb.: Eng. fr. Fr. énormité: a heinous crime or offence, an outrage, an extravagance, an excess; also, abstr. heinousness, extreme badness.

1489 And to avoide such enormities and injuries: CAXTON, Stat. 4 Hen. VII., c. 12, sig. d vi v^o (1869). 1546 But here they say that in healing these evils and enormities we do more hurt than good as to make tumults: G. JOVE, Exp. Dan., ch. xii. [R.]. 1598 We shall speak of the particular abuses and enormities of the government: SPENS. [J.]. 1713 There are many little enormities in the world, which our preachers would be very glad to see removed: ADDISON, Guardian. [J.].

enquête, sb.: Fr.: enquiry, inquest.

*1878 Whatever be the result of the enquête, it seems now quite improbable that there was enough fulminating powder...to cause such an explosion: Lloyd's Wkly., May 19, p. 7/2. [St.]

enragé, fem. enragée, adj. and sb.: Fr.: mad, wild, desperate; a lunatic, a desperado.

1732 A Good Picture but less Judgment than Fire Enragé: RICHARDSON, Statues, &c., in Italy, p. 299. 1790 The third part [of the Assembly] is composed of what is called here the Enragés, that is the madmen: Amer. State Papers, For. Relat., Vol. I. p. 382 (1832). 1791 The Enragés, long since known by the name of Jacobins, have lost much in the public opinion: ib., p. 386. 1792 he may resign, he may be superseded, his place may be occupied by an enragé, by Servan, or Prince Charles of Hesse: GIBBON, Life & Lett., p. 151 (1869). 1798 the present chargé...has the character of an enragé: J. ADAMS, Wks., Vol. VIII. p. 690 (1853).

ens, pl. entia, sb.: Late Lat., a substantival use of ens, coined in a late period of Classical Lat. as pres. part. to esse, = 'to be', 'to exist': an object of sense or speech or thought.

1. anything which exists or which in any way 'is'.

1603 For example, Heaven is a subject, which is considered both of the Logician, natural Philosopher, and Astronomer: but in divers respects, as of the Logician, because it is ens; and therefore his subject, as he disputeth de omni scibili: C. HAYDON, Def. Judic. Astral., p. 218. 1614 Eternity is properly the duration of an uncreated Ens: T. ADAMS, quoted in C. H. SPURGEON'S Trans. David, Vol. IV. p. 471. 1678 Leucippus and his Companion Democritus make the first Principles of all things to be Plenum and Vacuum (Body and Space) whereof one is Ens the other Non-ens, and the differences of Body, which are only Figure, Order and Position, to be the Causes of all other things: CUDWORTH, Intell. Syst., Bk. I. ch. I. p. 8.

2. entity, being.

bef. 1586 the quiddity of Ens...will hardly agree with a Corslet: SIDNEY, Apol. Poet., p. 55 (1868). bef. 1640 Then Ens is represented as father of the Predicaments, his ten sons: MILTON, College Exercise. [C. E. D.]

3. esp. ens primum, = 'first ens', according to Paracelsus and old chemists, the essence of a substance, or that part of a substance which constitutes its virtue and efficacy.

1599 Why Humour (as 'tis ens) we thus define it | To be a quality of aire or water: B. JONSON, Ev. Man out of his Hum., Prol. Wks., p. 83 (1616). 1657 The Sun of the Microcosm (which Paracelsus calls the Ens or Being of the seed and virtue or power) is Man also generated: H. PINNELL, Philos. Ref., p. 29.

ens entium, phr.: Late Lat.: being of beings, absolute being, supreme being (either abstract or personified).

1604 ens entium: a power above all humane power that lookt for reuerence: D. DIGGES, Four Parad., III. p. 83. bef. 1738 To thee, Creator uncreate | O entium ens! divinely great: M. GREEN, Spleen. [R.]

ens independens, phr.: Late Lat.: that which exists independently of any other existence.

1659 it is the honour of Christ as God that he is ens independens, hath his being of himself: N. HARDY, 1st Ep. John, Nichol's Ed., p. 155/2 (1865).

ens per accidens, phr.: Late Lat.: that which exists only as an accident of ens per se, i.e. a substance.

1829 the scholastic division of existence into ens per se and ens per accidens: Edin. Rev., Vol. 50, p. 212.

ens rationis, phr.: Late Lat.: an entity of reason, a product of a finite mind; opposed to ens reale, that which exists independently of any finite mind.

1567 what ado was made in daily disputations...about genus and species, and the rest of the universals...whether they were entia realia or rationis: JEWELL, Apol. & Def., Wks., p. 612 (1848). 1602 Meane while we leaue them to chop logicke in barbarisme, and feede their chimerical conceits with Relatiues of Ens rationis, or rather Ens insensibile insensatum irrationale, insatutum, fictum: W. WATSON, Quodlibets of Relig. & State, p. 47. 1606 He maketh it Ens Rationis, or a meere Chymera that (as logicians hold) hath no essence or being at all a parte rei: R. PARSONS, Answer to Coke, ch. xiii. p. 320. 1632 Rejected...for entia rationis...fictitious Chymara's, figments of mens brain: J. GAULE, Mag-astro-mancer, p. 107. 1684 nay, though it be a mere ens intentionale or rationis, which is the object of the thought, yet the act of the mind is real: S. CHARNOCK, Wks., in Nichol's Ser. Stand. Divines, Vol. V. p. 294 (1866). 1711 Our streets are filled with...flying pigs... Strange! that one who has all the birds and beasts in nature to choose out of, should live at the sign of an Ens Rationis: Spectator, No. 28, Apr. 2, Vol. I. p. 109 (1826). 1803 All that we see...are mere entia rationis, having no real existence: Edin. Rev., Vol. I, p. 484.

ensemble, sb.: Fr.: whole, general effect, uniformity. See tout ensemble.

1750 these trifling things...collectively form that ensemble: LORD CHESTERFIELD, Letters, Vol. II. No. 15, p. 61 (1774). 1819 but the want of 'ensemble' was very discernible in the movements of the French: Edin. Rev., Vol. 32, p. 211. 1836 The performers were few, but excellent—the ensemble perfect: Ref. on a Ramble to Germany, p. 41. 1839 The French Government obtained a majority of thirteen on the ensemble of the Address, but after its presentation to the King they all resigned: H. GREVILLE, Diary, p. 130. 1840 Examine the picture at a little distance, and the ensemble of the composition and colour is extraordinarily pleasing: THACKERAY, Misc. Essays, p. 177 (1885). 1833 Enriched with bas-reliefs, statuettes, &c., it forms an ensemble of a most imposing character: C. C. PERKINS, Ital. Sculpt., p. 42.

ensemble, adv.: Fr.: together, conjointly; used as adj. by Byron.

1813 Ward talks of going to Holland, and we have partly discussed an ensemble expedition: BYRON, in MOORE'S Life, p. 341 (1875).

ensilage: Eng. fr. Fr. See silo.

entamé, fem. entamée, part.: Fr.: broached, entered upon.

1715 but the difficulty is to find the mony, and I know of none we have by us but that of M. Laumarie's, which if Mr. Rance (Mary of Modena) and you agree to it, I consent should be entamé on this occasion: In P. M. THORNTON'S Stuart Dynasty, App. I. p. 362 (1890). 1766 Many people think that it would have been more for their credit, had they never entamé that negotiation: In J. H. JESSE'S Geo. Selwyn & Contemporaries, Vol. II. p. 103 (1882).

entasis, sb.: Late Lat. fr. Gk. ἐντασις, = 'a stretching', 'a detention': Archit.: the swelling or slight convexity of the shaft of a column, intended to make the column look as if it were bounded by straight lines.

Bœuf ['of beef'].—This is the portion of the animal which lies under the long ribs, or those thick slices of delicate meat which may be got from between them: BREGION & MILLER, Pract. Cook, p. 41.

entre-deux, adv.: Fr.: betwixt and between.

1850 embroidered entre-deux: Harper's Mag., Vol. 1. p. 432.

entrée, sb.: Fr.: entry. Early Anglicised as entree, entre, entry.

1. an entry into a place or apartment; esp. an entry in state by a person or persons of distinction.

1761 disputes about rank, precedents, processions, entrées, &c.: HOR. WALPOLE, Letters, Vol. III. p. 431 (1857). 1763 the first being found in one of our portmanteaus, when they were examined at the bureau, cost me seventeen livres entrée: SMOLLETT, France & Italy, II. Wks., Vol. IV. p. 256 (1817). 1804 The entrée itself, which was made at midnight, is described in a very pompous manner: Edin. Rev., Vol. 4, p. 89. 1813 Such an entrée! So much the air of a woman of fashion! M. EDGEWORTH, Patronage, Vol. I. p. 69 (1833). 1815 Emma watched the entrée of her friend: J. AUSTEN, Emma, Vol. II. ch. viii. p. 194 (1833). 1816 our heroine's entrée into life could not take place till after three or four days had been spent in learning what was mostly worn: Northanger Abbey, Vol. I. p. 18. 1819 the principal caboceros sacrificed a slave at each quarter of the town, on their entrée: BOWDICH, Mission to Ashantee, Pt. II. ch. v. p. 274. — All the horns flourished as he made his exit and entrée: ib., p. 282. 1821 an "entrée" | Up the back stairs: BYRON, Vision of Judg., l. iv. 1829 the widow made her entrée in full pomp: Edin. Rev., Vol. 49, p. 133. 1850 felt that his grand entrée was altogether bawled and ludicrous: THACKERAY, Pendennis, Vol. I. ch. viii. p. 85 (1879). 1879 It gave him the entrée to places: MRS. OLIPHANT, Within the Precincts, ch. xix. p. 190.

2. right or privilege of admission (into distinguished or exclusive company). At Court and in great establishments the grande entrée is the privilege of admission to receptions and on state occasions; the petite entrée, the privilege of admission on a familiar footing.

1762 I am very glad to have the entrée: In J. H. Jesse's Geo. Selwyn & Contemporaries, Vol. I. p. 212 (1882). 1766 Whoever wish'd a noble air, | Must gain it by an entrée there: H. MORE, Florio, 500, p. 35. 1767 He has the entrée at all hours: P. BECKFORD, Leit. fr. Ital., Vol. I. p. 99 (1805). 1768 etiquette did not allow Mrs. Howard the entrée of the coach with the Princess: HOR. WALPOLE, Letters, Vol. I. p. cxxvi. (1857). 1822—3 the nobility who had from birth...the privilege of the entrée: SCOTT, Pev. Peak, ch. xiv. p. 502 (1886). 1828 I lost a few Napoleons at scarté in order to pay my entrée: LORD LYTTON, Pelham, ch. xxx. p. 85 (1859). 1884 he no longer denied himself the right of entrée to Lady Wroughton's garden house: Baboo, Vol. II. ch. vi. p. 114.

3. a kind of dance opening an entertainment or ballet; also, a kind of musical march designed to accompany a processional entry.

1724 ENTREE, or ENTRE, is a particular Kind of Air so called: Short Explic. of For. Wds. in Mus. Bks. 1742 When the King came in, the Faussans (two comic dancers) were there and danced an entrée: HOR. WALPOLE, Letters, Vol. I. p. 133 (1857).

4. a made dish served at a meal between the principal courses, esp. between a course of fish and a principal course of meat.

1759 For this entrée is generally provided a new Westphalia or Bayonne ham, soaked as before: W. VERRAL, Cookery, p. 46. 1763 The repas, served up in three services, or courses, with entrées and hors d'œuvres, exclusive of the fruit: SMOLLETT, France & Italy, v. Wks., Vol. v. p. 283 (1817). 1822 we are here treated with sundry entrées of fish: Edin. Rev., Vol. 37, p. 47. 1845 Entrées.—A name given to dishes served in the first course with the fish dishes: BREGION & MILLER, Pract. Cook, p. 41. bef. 1863 the entrées arrived, and the roast beef: THACKERAY, Roundabout Papers, p. 21 (1879). 1870 champagne...is creaming gently in every glass, and the entrées are making their savoury rounds: R. BROUGHTON, Red as a Rose, Vol. I. p. 288. 1878 He had his face turned toward them, helping himself to an entrée: GEO. ELIOT, Dan Deronda, Bk. v. ch. xxxv. p. 306.

entrefilet, sb.: Fr.: a short newspaper article.

1882 A semi-official entrefilet runs as follows: Standard, Dec. 20, p. 5.

entremets, sb.: Fr. (Cotgr.) for Old Fr. entremes (which was early Anglicised): a dish served after the principal course of meat at a dinner or banquet. The word being often pl., a false singular entremet is sometimes found in English.

1609 Sir Edward Hoby...comes in like an entremets with a work of his dedicated to the relapsed ladies: DUDLEY CARLETON, in Court & Times of Jas. I., Vol. I. p. 100 (1848). 1738 It is already very easy to distinguish at sight the puny son of a compound entremets, from the lusty offspring of beef and pudding: LORD CHESTERFIELD, in Common Sense, No. 54, Misc. Wks., Vol. I. p. 88 (1777). 1769 Next are the Entremets, or second course dishes, of which I shall put down about forty: W. VERRAL, Cookery, p. 157. 1778 With such obsolete prejudices I certainly am not very proper at modern suppers, yet with such entremets one would not wholly miss them: HOR. WALPOLE, Letters, Vol. VII. p. 64 (1858). 1786 Rich Entremets, whose name none knows, | Ragouts, French Tourtes, and Fricandeaux: H. MORE, Florio, 649, p. 42. 1845 Entremets.—Is the second course, which comes between the roast meat and the desserts: BREGION & MILLER, Pract. Cook, p. 41. 1856 I had only one competitor in the dispensation of this entremet (rat-soup): E. K. KANE, Arctic Explor., Vol. I. ch. xxix. p. 395. 1889 an entremet in the menu of a City dinner: Punch, May 25, p. 247.

Painting*, p. 204. 1729 this epitome or picture in miniature of the incomparable beauties of the Britanick constitution: H. BROOKE, Fool of Qual., Vol. iii. p. 241. 1812 Cleopatra strikes me as the epitome of her sex—foad, lively, sad, tender, teasing: BYRON, in Moore's Life, Vol. ii. p. 256 (1832).

epitropus, sb.: Late Lat. fr. Gk. ἐπιτροπος, = 'a steward', in Late Gk., 'a primate': the primate of a Greek community. Anglicised as epitrope (= =).

1819 sole epitrope of the Greek villages that cover the island: T. HOPE, Anast., Vol. i. ch. xiii. p. 249 (1820). 1820 the two epitropi or Greek primates: T. S. HUGHES, Trav. in Sicily, Vol. ii. ch. iii. p. 49.

epizeuxis, sb.: Gk. ἐπιζεύξις, = 'fastening together', Late Gk., 'repetition of a word': Rhet.: the effective repetition of a word or phrase in a clause without anything intervening, as "She said, 'I am weary, weary'"; "Whither away, whither away?"

1589 the figure Epizeuxis in the former verses: PUTTENHAM, Eng. Poet., iii. xix. p. 211 (1869).

epoch*, Eng. fr. Late Lat. epocha; epocha, epochê, Late Lat. fr. Gk. ἐποχή, = 'a pause'.

1. a point of time marked by some important event from which the passage of time is reckoned; an important event from the date of which the passage of time is computed.

1665 these that follow Makomet have a different Epocche to accompt by; as the Æra Gelatina, from Geladin, Æra Jendgirdina from Jendgird: besides the Hejyra they have from Makomet, which is their Epoccha or accompt of Time: SIR TH. HERBERT, Trav., p. 305 (1677). bef. 1670 He moiled a while in Chronology, especially after the Epoccha of Times was meetly set from the Olympiad of Greece, and Consulsships of Rome: J. HACKET, Abp. Williams, Pt. i. 17, p. 13 (1693). 1678 that so he might thereby somewhat mollifie that Opinion of the Novity of the World, by removing the Epoccha and Date thereof to so great a distance: CUDWORTH, Intell. Syst., Bk. i. ch. iv. p. 241. 1681—1703 the time designed by God to be the epoccha from whence all those glories...are to commence: TH. GOODWIN, Wks., in Nichol's Ser. Stand. Divines, Vol. vii. p. 365 (1863). 1688 These are the Practices of the World we live in; especially since the Year Sixty, the grand Epocch of Falshood, as well as Debauchery: SOUTH, Serm., Vol. i. p. 494 (1727). 1692 This time we as an Epocche will date | In which they were so bold to tempt their fate: M. MORGAN, Late Victory, p. 3. 1776 The second day of July 1776, will be the most memorable epocha in the history of America: J. ADAMS, Wks., Vol. ix. p. 430 (1854).

2. a period of time distinguished by some special characteristic, an era, an age.

1628 His clothes were never young in our memory: you might make long Epochs from them and put them into the Almanack with the deare yeere, and the great frost: J. EARLE, Microcosm., 74, p. 99 (1668). 1646 memorable Æras, Epochs or terms of time: SIR TH. BROWN, Pseud. Ep., Bk. vi. ch. i. p. 229 (1686). bef. 1658 Howe'r, since we're deliver'd let there be, | From this Flood too another Epochs: J. CLEVELAND, Wks., p. 295 (1687). 1675 If with Master Made we make two Epochs in this Prophecy: J. SMITH, Christ. Relig. Appeal, Bk. ii. ch. xi. § 3, p. 130. 1748 These are the two great epochas in our English History, which I recommend to your particular attention: LORD CHESTERFIELD, Letters, Vol. i. No. 121, p. 270 (1774). 1787 An Analysis of many epochas, periods, and cycles, in which upwards of 80,000 figures are employed: Gent. Mag., 905/1. 1816 the same inventions have been practised in the several provinces of Greece in distinct epochs: J. DALLAWAY, Of Stat. and Sculpt., p. 81. — so fine a piece of sculpture could not be ascribed to either epocha: ib., p. 335. 1821 The epocha during which the great poets of France flourished: Edin. Rev., Vol. 35, p. 177. 1877 End of the Cirey Epoch: COL. HAMLEY, Voltaire, ch. xix. p. 141.

ἐποχή, sb.: Gk.: as a term of Stoic philosophy, suspension of judgment.

1886 Such ἐποχή and caution as Mr. Leaf exhibits will be cardinal virtues with the most advanced students of Homer: Athenaeum, Sept. 11, p. 331/1.

*epode (= 2), sb.: Eng. fr. Fr. épode: in Greek lyric poetry the last stanza of a lyric system, coming after the strophe and antistrophe; also, a kind of lyric poem of which Horace composed a book, and Ben Jonson a specimen.

1608 Moreover, unto him [Archilochus], as first inventor, are attributed Epodes, Tetrameter, Iambicks, Procritique and Prosodiacks: HOLLAND, Tr. Plat. Mor., p. 1257. bef. 1616 now my thought takes wing, | And now an Epode to deep ears I sing: B. JONSON, Forest, x. 1671 [See antistrophe]. 1710 CONGREVE, Wks., Vol. iii. p. 433 (1761). [Jodrell] 1757 [Gray, in his Pindarics] had shackled himself with strophe, antistrophe, and epode: HOR. WALPOLE, Letters, Vol. iii. p. 97 (1857).

*epōnymos, -mus, pl. epōnymi, sb.: Gk. ἐπώνυμος, = 'giving a name to': one after whom anything is named, as the heroes after whom the tribes and demes of Attica were called. As adj. the term was applied to one of the archons at Athens, and one of the ephors at Sparta, who gave his name to his year of office.

1887 He [Robert of Brunne] refers to Thomas of Kendale and Master Edmond—poetic chroniclers otherwise unknown—as his authorities for the story of King Engle, who gave his name to England, and of Skardying and Flayn, the eponym of Scarborough and Flamborough: Athenaeum, Dec. 3, p. 740/3.

εποποιία, sb.: Late Lat. fr. Gk. ἐποποιία: a heroic poem in hexameter verse; hence, an epic poem generally. Anglicised as epopee.

1591 Briefly, Aristotle and the best censurers of Poesie, would haue the Epopeia, that is, the heroickall Poem, should ground on some historie: SIR JOHN HARRINGTON, Apol. Poet., in Haslewood's Eng. Poets and Poetry, Vol. ii. p. 140 (1815). 1779 If we believe the representations of some writers, Poems equal in length to the most celebrated epopeas of Greece and Rome have been handed down, without the aid of letters, from the remotest antiquity to the present day: V. KNOX, Ess., 134. [R.] επος, sb.: Gk. ἔπος, = 'word', 'verse': a heroic poem. Wrongly used for pl. ἔπη by English scholars.

1872 She [Saint Theresa] found her epos in the reform of a religious order: GEO. ELIOT, Middlemarch, Frel. (1874). 1883 A. Dobson, in Athenaeum, Sept. 8, p. 304/2.

épouse, sb.: Fr.: wife, bride.

1823 Your other allies...are Milor B... and épouse: BYRON, in Moore's Life, p. 925 (1875).

ἐπρίς, fem. ἐπρίς, adj.: Fr.: captivated, smitten. Anglicised by Caxton as esprised, fr. Old Fr. espris (Cotgr.).

1848 that Major seems to be particularly ἐπρίς: THACKERAY, Van. Fair, Vol. ii. ch. xxvi. p. 291 (1879). 1883 "I think Mr. Murkle is already rather ἐπρίς in that direction," pursued Mrs. Clymer, sily: L. OLIPHANT, Altiora Peto, ch. vii. p. 91 (1884).

εἶσος, sb.: Gk. εἶσος: the name of the fifth letter of the Greek alphabet, E, ε, meaning 'bare ε', given by late grammarians to distinguish it from the diphthong α, which was pronounced like ε in Late Gk. As a numeral it had the value of five.

[The Semitic character which became epsilon in Greek was a kind of smooth h, the Hebrew he, ה.]

épuisé, fem. épuisée, part.: Fr.: worn out, exhausted.

1759 You will be as épuisé as Princess Craon with all the triumphs over Niagara: HOR. WALPOLE, Letters, Vol. iii. p. 248 (1857). 1769 I should not have thought her likely to be governed by an épuisé: ib., Vol. v. p. 205.

épuisement, sb.: Fr.: exhaustion.

1742 putting off her épuisements and lassitudes, to take a trip: HOR. WALPOLE, Letters, Vol. i. p. 202 (1857).

epulo, sb.: Lat.: a glutton, gourmand.

1563 That riche Epulo, of whom Saint Luke maketh mention, was for his drunkenness, and riotous excesse, condemned, &c.: STUBBS, Anat. Ab., fol. 65 r.

épuration, sb.: Fr.: purification. épuré, fem. -ée, part.: purified.

1883 The French people...has been offended by...the Épuration of its magistracy: Sat. Rev., Vol. 56, p. 489/1. 1883 Although shorn as occasion serves of their full powers and épures, as it is termed, the independence of the Judicature is suspected: Daily Telegraph, Jan. 22, p. 5.

épure, sb.: Fr.: diagram, plan.

*equator (= 2), æquator, sb.: Eng. fr. Late Lat. aequator, noun of agent to Lat. aequare, = 'to make equal': an imaginary line formed by the intersection with the earth's surface of the plane which passes through the middle of, and at right angles to, the earth's axis; also, Astron. the great circle of the celestial sphere on the same plane; also, humorously, the waist of a stout person.

1891 [See equinox]. 1598 Antiesi, those that dwell vnder one halfe meridian and paralell of like distance from the Equator, the one northward, the other southward: FLORIO. 1617 The Æquator compasseth the middle swelling of the Celestiall Sphere betwene both the Poles of the world...the Æquator of the earth: F. MORYSON, Itin., Pt. iii. p. 65. 1641 You will find some such as will prognosticate your date, and tell you that, after your long summer solstice, the Equator calls for you, to reduce you to the ancient and equal house of Libra: MILTON, Animadv., Wks., Vol. i. p. 177 (1806).

1646 its Polary parts should never incline or veer unto the Equator: SIR TH. BROWN, Pseud. Ep., Bk. ii. ch. ii. p. 43 (1686). 1685 the heat is not so unsufferable under the Equator as where more remote: SIR TH. HERBERT, Trav., p. 8 (1677). bef. 1667 They who above do various Circles find, | Say like a Ring th' Equator Heav'n does bind: COWLEY, Wks., Vol. i. p. 22 (1707). 1678 That the Mundane Sphere is so framed, in respect of the Disposition of the Equator and Ecliptick, as renders the greatest part of the Earth uninhabitable to Men and most other Animals: CUDWORTH, Intell. Syst., Bk. i. ch. ii. p. 78. 1877 Mr. Hopper rubbed his equator—but in the sense of a man who is invited to perform a miracle: L. W. M. LOCKHART, Mine is Thine, ch. xv. p. 135 (1879).

equus, pl. equites, sb.: Lat.: a knight. In Ancient Rome the knights were originally three hundred horse-soldiers of patrician rank. Subsequently the order, which possessed important political privileges, consisted of wealthy citizens whose census amounted to more than four hundred thousand sesterces.

1540 so elected he out of the resydue, whyche were lusty in yeres, valyant and hardy, a greater numb're, whome bycause in warres they shulde be on horsebacke, he call'd theym Equites: ELYOT, Im. Governancie, fol. 62 v. 1601 Exunt Equites: B. JONSON, Poetast., v. Wks., p. 127/2 (1860).

1646 so elected he out of the resydue, whyche were lusty in yeres, valyant and hardy, a greater numb're, whome bycause in warres they shulde be on horsebacke, he call'd theym Equites: ELYOT, Im. Governancie, fol. 62 v. 1601 Exunt Equites: B. JONSON, Poetast., v. Wks., p. 127/2 (1860).

équestrienne, sb.: Fr. (argot): a horsewoman, a female circus-rider.

1882 No favourite équestrienne ever received more notes or flowers: Standard, Jan. 11, p. 3.

*equilibrium, Late Lat., aequilibrium, Lat.; (a) equilibrio, abl.: sb.: equipoise, even balance; also, metaph. due proportion, indifference or doubt.

1646 Charles the Fifth, Henry the Eighth of England, and Francis the First of France, were to keep their power in aequilibrio: HOWELL, Lewis XIII., p. 149. 1666 I counterpoised it in a pair of Scales, that would loose their Equilibrium with about the 30th part of a Grain: Phil. Trans., Vol. i. No. 14, p. 232. 1678 For though water will creep up a filtre above its level, yet I question whether to so great an excess above its aequilibrio with the air: J. RAY, Journ. Low Countr., p. 297. 1685 Things are not left to an Equilibrium, to hover under an Indifference, whether they shall come to pass, or not come to pass: SOUTH, Serm., Vol. i. p. 300 (1727). 1742 when he fell under any deliberation of great concern to him, and the point was nice, and stood almost in aequilibrio, he took his pen, and wrote down the reasons either way, as they fell into his mind: R. NORTH, Lives of Norths, Vol. ii. p. 255 (1826). 1756 they will destroy each other's influence and keep the country in aequilibrio: J. ADAMS, Wks., Vol. i. p. 24 (1856). 1828 with a House of Representatives so equally balanced as this with the scale vibrating nearly in aequilibrio: Congress. Debates, Vol. iv. Pt. i. p. 1169. 1843 Why, according to Dr. Whewell himself, did the ancients fail in discovering the laws of mechanics, that is, of equilibrium and of the communication of motion? J. S. MILL, System of Logic, Vol. ii. p. 190 (1856). 1861 She made a great disturbance in all social aequilibria (pl.) to establish her own: Wheat & Tares, ch. ii. p. 9. 1876 restoring the equilibrium and freeing the brake-blocks from the wheels: Times, Nov. 24. [St.]

*equinox (= 2), sb.: Eng. fr. Lat. aequinocinium, pl. aequinoclia: the moment when the sun passes the equatorial plane and makes day and night equal, which it does twice in the year—in March and September; also, by extension, an equinoctial wind; and metaph. an equivalent.

1891 this same cercle is cleped also the weyere, equator, of the day / for when the sonne is in the heuedes of aries & libra, then ben the daies & the nyghtes illike of lengthe in al the world. & ther-fore ben thise two signes called the equinoxia: CHAUCER, Astrol., p. 9 (1872). abt. 1400 a Spere, that is pighte in to the Erthe, upon the hour of mydday, when it is Equenoxium, that schewethe no schadwe on no syde: Tr. Maunder's Voyage, ch. xvii. p. 183 (1839). 1570 The fashion of the heauen, the Equinox, the Solsticie, and the course of the sterres: J. DRE, Pref. Billingsley's Euclid, sig. d iij v^o. 1600 Their Aequinoctia are vpon the 16. of March, and the 16. of September: JOHN POPE, Tr. Leo's Hist. Afr., p. 36. 1603 the equinoctium: C. HEYDON, Def. Judic. Astrol., p. 380. 1603 the tunc is so skillful in the solstices and equinoxes: HOLLAND, Tr. Plut. Mor., p. 974. — the Aequinox of the Spring: ib., p. 1213. 1604 'Tis to his virtue a just equinox. | The one as long as the other: SHAKS., Oth., ii. 3. 129. bef. 1627 Shepherds of people had need know the calenders of tempests in state, which are commonly greatest when things grow to equality, as natural tempests about the equinoctia: BACON, Ess., Seditions. [Davies] 1651 He...gave me a water which he said was only rain-water of the autumnal equinox: EVELYN, Diary, Vol. i. p. 284 (1872). 1665 the heat not only under the Equinox, but the Tropiques when the Sun comes to the Vertex, is much more intense...than it is about the Polar Circles: SIR TH. HERBERT, Trav., p. 39 (1677).

equipage (= =), sb.: Eng. fr. Fr. equipage (Cotgr.).

1. equipment, appointments, all things duly provided for an appearance in public, or a journey, or voyage, or expedition, whether made by an individual, or by a number of individuals (as a military force, a fleet, a ship); array, arrangement.

1593 man by man they march'd in equipage: PEELE, Ord. Garter, Wks., p. 587/2 (1861). 1594 Should I, that...march amidst his royal equipage, | Embase myself to speak to such as they? — Looking Glasse, Wks., p. 132/1. 1609 A dearer birth than this his love had brought, | To march in ranks of better equipage: SHAKS., Son., xxxii. 1614 as good an Equipage as you would wish: B. JONSON, Bart. Fair, Wks., Vol. ii. sig. A 5^o (1631-40). 1645 upon a sudden he put this Army in perfect equipage: HOWELL, Lett., i. xvii. p. 33. 1646 The Duke of Pastrana came that summer to Paris in another such splendid Equipage: HOWELL, Lewis XIII., p. 14. 1648 putting myself in a suitable equipage I got into the council-chamber: EVELYN, Corresp., Vol. iii. p. 34 (1872). 1657 After the finishing of one great siege and two small ones, and an aboad of fifteen dayes in Flanders without Equipage: J. D., Tr. Lett. of Voiture, No. 123, Vol. i. p. 195. 1663 Their Arms and Equipage did fit, | As well as Vertues, parts and wit: S. BUTLER, Hudibras, Pt. i. Cant. i. p. 47.

2. a retinue or train.

1580 teache her tread aloft in buskin fine, | With queint Bellona in her equipage: SPENS., Shep. Cal., Oct. 114. 1665 Next day he resolved to fight, and accordingly divides his Army into three: one part he assigns to Amet-cavum... another to Tardi-cavum... and the last unto himself: in which equipage the whole Camp removed to Zietelfore: SIR TH. HERBERT, Trav., p. 83 (1677). — his kindred and friends in their best equipage assemble: ib., p. 307. 1693 A Country Squire, with the Equipage of a Wife and two Daughters: CONGREVE, Old Bachelor, iv. 8. [C.] 1715 the Apostolical Equipage, gives a Dignity even to that: RICHARDSON, Theor. Painting, p. 168. 1785 Our palaces, our ladies, and our pomp | Of equipage, our gardens, and our sports: COWPER, Task, i. Poems, Vol. i. p. 25 (1808).

2 a. a complete set of utensils and appurtenances applied to some specific use.

1711 Your paper is a part of my tea equipage: Spectator, No. 92, June 15, Vol. i. p. 344 (1826).

3. a private carriage with horses and servants. This special use is perhaps due to a mistaken idea that the equi- has to do with the Latin for 'a horse'.

1855 Several aristocratical equipages had been attacked even in Hyde Park: MACAULAY, Hist. Eng., ch. xxii. [C. E. D.]

4. equality, equal proportion. This occasional use is a mere error, the equi- being supposed to have to do with the Latin for 'equal', as in equilibrium, and perhaps originating in a mere clerical or typographical error for equipoise.

1598 Fals. I will not lend thee a penny. Pist. I will retort the sum in equipage: SHAKS., Merry Wives, ii. 2 (Quartos). 1613 When loe, (O Fate!) his work, not seeming fit | To walk in equipage with better wit, | Is kept from light: W. BROWNE, Brit. Pastorals, Bk. i. 2. [R.] 1655 examples of men... stand in so near equipage with the commands of God: SANDERSON, Wks., ii. Pref., 10. [Davies]

5. a collection of small implements carried either in an étui, or on a châtelaine, fashionable in 18 c.

bef. 1762 Behold this equipage by Mathers wrought, | With fifty guineas (a great penn'orth) bought, | See on the toothpick Mars and Cupid strive; | And both the struggling figures seem alive: LADY M. W. MONTAGU, Town Eclogues. [C.]

equipondium, sb.: Lat.: equipoise, equality of wit.

1664 and that therefore there would be an error and mistake in summing up the dimensions and equipondium of its members at a more moderate distance with the same measures and proportions: EVELYN, Tr. Frart's Parall. Archit., Pt. ii. p. 108.

equivocator (= = =), sb.: Eng. fr. Late Lat. aequivocator, noun of agent to aequivocari, = 'to be called by the same name': one who uses ambiguous language, one who prevaricates.

1605 here's an equivocator, that could swear in both the scales against either scale: SHAKS., Macb., ii. 3. 9. 1621 The second rank is of liars and equivocators, as Apollo Pythius, and the like: R. BURTON, Anat. Mel., Pt. i. Sec. 2, Mem. 1, Subs. 2, Vol. ii. p. 62 (1827). 1828 "False equivocator that thou art," said the King: SCOTT, Fair Maid of Perth, ch. xiii. p. 170 (1886).

equuleus, sb.: Lat., 'a young horse': the name in Ancient Rome of a kind of rack.

1883 The first sight of the beasts or the equuleus was quite enough: Sat. Rev., Vol. 55, p. 335.

æra, aera, sb.: Late Lat. fr. Lat. aera, = 'counters', pl. of aes, = 'copper', 'bronze', 'money': a period of years reckoned from a fixed epoch (see epoch 1); a specific period of time; an epoch from which the years of a period of time are computed.

1646 that custom having an elder Æra, than this Chronology affordeth: SIR TH. BROWN, Pseud. Ep., Bk. iv. ch. ix. p. 165 (1686). 1717 the change of my scene of life, from Windsor-forest to the side of the Thames...one of the grand Æra's of my days, and may be called a notable period in so inconsiderable a history: POPE, Lett., Wks., Vol. viii. p. 17 (1757). 1742 Auspicious Æra! E. YOUNG, Night Thoughts, iii. p. 45 (1773). 1748 I am extremely pleased with your continuation of the History of the Reformation, which is one of those important æras that deserves your utmost attention: LORD CHESTERFIELD, Lett., Vol. i. No. 117, p. 255 (1774). 1749 It will be a new æra (or, as my Lord Baltimore calls it, a new æra), in English History: HOR. WALPOLE, Lett., Vol. ii. p. 185 (1857). 1877 the Christian æra: Times, Feb. 17. [St.]

Erato: Lat. fr. Gk. Ἐρατώ: name of the Muse of lyric and amatory poetry.

Erd Geist, phr.: Ger.: earth-spirit.

1833 "Of twenty millions," asks the author of Sartor Resartus, "that have read and spouted this thunder-speech of the Erd Geist, are there yet twenty of us that have learned the meaning thereof": G. A. SALA's Quite Alone, Vol. i. ch. i. p. 7 (1864).

Erebus: Lat. fr. Gk. Ἔρεβος: name of a space of utter darkness between Earth and Hades.

1582 Shee crieth on the Erebus darcknesse: R. STANVHURST, Tr. Virgil's Aen., Bk. iv. p. 113 (1880). 1590 This arm should send him down to Erebus. | To shroud his shame in darkness of the night: MARLOWE, Tamburl., iv. i. Wks., p. 26/1 (1858). 1694 These nymphs of Erebus: PEELE, Alcasar, Prolog., Wks., p. 425/2 (1861). 1596 SHAKS., Merch. of Ven., v. 87.

erector (= =), sb.: Eng. fr. Late Lat. erector, noun of agent to Lat. erigere, = 'to erect', 'raise': one who raises up, one who founds, one who causes to be built.

bef. 1550 That cheiffe is nowe erector | And formost of the ryng: Quoted in J. SKELTON's Wks., Vol. ii. p. 410/1 (Dyce, 1843). 1579 the first erector of the [holy band]: NORTH, Tr. Plutarck, p. 295 (1612). 1645 the erectors of Jeroboam's calves: MOUNTAGU, Devout Ess., Pt. i. p. 94. [T.] 1823-3 William Feveril...became the erector of that Gothic fortress, which...gives the name of Castleton to the adjacent village: SCOTT, Prov. Peak, ch. i. p. 21 (1886).

ergo, adv.: Lat.: therefore; hence, an argument, a positive conclusion. The clown in Hamlet corrupts it to argal.

1533 this your argument, 'God may make his body in many places at once; ergo, it is so': TYNDALE, Answer, p. 224 (1850). 1538 such title of prescription was at the common law. Ergo it abydeeth as it was at the common law: Tr. Littleton's Tenures, Bk. ii. ch. x. fol. 38 v^o. 1549 He goeth to his death boldly... Ergo he dyeth in a iuste cause: LATIMER, 7 Serm. bef. K. Edw. VI., iv. p. 116 (1866). 1552 Some courtiers are honest. Ergo, some honest men are courtiers: T. EDGEWORTH, Patronage, Vol. 1. p. 94 (1833). 1818 and an esprit du corps generally shields the culprit from justice: Amer. State Papers, For. Relat., Vol. IV. p. 324 (1834). 1826 every Prussian feels a sort of esprit de corps: Ref. on a Ramble to Germany, p. 376. 1827 there is an esprit du corps among merchants, as well as among other classes of the community: Congress. Debates, Vol. III. p. 204. 1830 they also possess an esprit de corps, which in them is equivalent to patriotism: E. BLAQUIERRE, Tr. Sig. Pananti, p. 337 (2nd Ed.). 1845 the elder recruits had acquired sufficient discipline and esprit de corps to keep the younger in subjection: WARBURTON, Cross. & Cross, Vol. 1. p. 313 (1848). 1865 You touch our esprit du corps, Lady Adela. We are all Ministerialists here: OUIDA, Strathmore, Vol. III. ch. iii. p. 47. 1878 Some sort of lying is, then, we find, attached to esprit de corps wherever it is excessive or undisciplined: T. MOZLEY, Ruling Ideas, vii. p. 175.

esprit follet, phr.: Fr.: a wanton spirit, goblin.

1820 In these particulars she seems to constitute a being of a middle class, between the esprit follet who places its pleasure in misleading and tormenting mortals, and the benevolent Fairy of the East, who uniformly guides, aids, and supports them: SCOTT, Monastery, Wks., Vol. II. p. 390/1 (1867).

esprit fort, phr.: Fr.: bold spirit, advanced thinker.

1684 let us lay aside all that presumption and vanity of those Esprits forts: Tr. Tavernier's Trav., Vol. II. p. 154. 1750 with those pretended Esprits forts, or with thoughtless libertines, who laugh at all religion, to show their wit, or disclaim it, to complete their riot: LORD CHESTERFIELD, Letters, Vol. 1. No. 180, p. 541 (1774). 1759 they look'd upon the responses of the oracle as meer priest-craft, and treated it as the esprits-forts have done religion in modern times: E. W. MONTAGU, Anc. Rep., p. 26. 1798 if it could be fully known to your sex how little amiable an esprit fort appears even to the profligate in ours, it might operate as a check to a certain habitual persiflage (as the French call it) which pervades the conversation of some ladies: In W. Roberts' Mem. Hannah More, Vol. II. p. 22 (1835). 1803 Mrs. F...tried...talking to Belinda as an esprit fort: M. EDGEWORTH, Belinda, Vol. 1. ch. xvi. p. 320 (1832). 1811 the esprits forts thus fluctuate between contrary extremes of chronological conjectures: Quarterly Rev., Vol. v. p. 22. 1822 I think I perceive, in the generation now coming forward, a disposition the reverse of the esprit fort so prevalent in the last century: L. SIMOND, Switzerland, Vol. 1. p. 355. 1828 endeavors to assume the credit of an esprit fort, by denying, &c.: SCOTT, Fair Maid of Perth, Introd., p. 17 (1886).

étourderie, sb.: Fr.: heedlessness, giddiness, silly blundering.

1763 the French—bating the étourderie of the mousquetaires and of a high-dried pétil-maltre or two...appear to me more lifeless than Germans: HOR. WALPOLE, Letters, Vol. iv. p. 85 (1857). 1779 at Paris, bating the pert étourderie of very young men, I protest I scarcely ever saw anything like vivacity: ib., Vol. ii. p. 222 (1858). 1807 if you have not étourderie, you have nothing: BERRISFORD, Miseries, Vol. ii. p. 68 (5th Ed.). 1812 George II...had suggested this device of a seeming étourderie on the part of his son: Edin. Rev., Vol. 20, p. 264. 1821 the unhappy étourderie of the trunk: Confess. of an Eng. Opium-Eater, Pt. i. p. 26 (1823).

étourdi, fem. -ie, adj.: Fr.: giddy, heedless, scatter-brained.

1691 The first that I begin with shall be that étourdy bete ['beast', 'creature'], that humble admirer of Jest an Quibble, the Melancholy Clergyman: Reasons of Mr. Bays, &c., p. 10. 1828 Had she but the animal spirits to be étourdie, she would be so: Engl. in France, Vol. ii. p. 347.

étranger, fem. étrangère, adj. and sb.: Fr.: strange, foreign; a stranger, a foreigner.

bef. 1863 straightway flung his furniture overboard and expressed a preference for sinking his ship rather than yielding it to the étranger: THACKERAY, Sec. Fun. of Napoleon, p. 322 (1879).

étrennes, sb. pl.: Fr.: New Year's gift, New Year's gifts. The Lat. strēna (whence étrennes) was Anglicised in 16 c. as strene.

[abt. 1520 Dame Nature's strene: Calisto & Meliboea, in Dodsley-Hazlitt's Old Plays, Vol. i. p. 55 (1876).] 1683 Mme. de Witt's magnificent volume belongs to the class of étrennes: Sat. Rev., Vol. 55, p. 377.

Etruscan: fr. Lat. Etruscus: of or belonging to Etruria, a region of Central Italy north of the Tiber, including Tuscany. The Etruscan language remains an unsolved problem of philology. The Etruscans were a distinct race from all other peoples of Italy, and their art had distinctive characteristics, and is of great interest, the Tuscan order being due to their architecture. Modern imitations of Ancient Etruscan pottery are also called Etruscan.

1776 Sir William Hamilton's collection of antique vases and Etruscan rarities: J. COLLIER, Mus. Trav., Ded., p. v. 1787 Here are also Etruscan inscriptions to amuse and puzzle the antiquarian: P. BECKFORD, Lett. fr. Ital., Vol. i. p. 170 (1805).

ettwee: Eng. fr. Fr. See étui.

étude, sb.: Fr.: a study.

1882 a fantasia on opera airs or an impromptu or an étude: Pall Mall Gaz., Dec. 22, p. 20.

étui, sb.: Fr.: a sheath or case (often ornamental) for holding small instruments or utensils, often attached to the dress.

1611 Estuy, A sheath, case, or box to put things in; and (more particularly) a case of little instruments, as sizzars, bodkin, pen-knife, &c., now commonly termed, an Etwee: COTGR. 1761 tiny pews, that look like étuis for the Earl and his diminutive Countess: HOR. WALPOLE, Letters, Vol. II. p. 264 (1857). 1771 he presented her with a very fine snuff-box, and me with a gold étui: SMOLLETT, Humph. Cl., p. 501 (1882). 1778 I waste as few minutes as possible, but constant application of the mind to some duties or other will impair a memory that is enclosed in so frail an étui: HOR. WALPOLE, Letters, Vol. VII. p. 51 (1858). 1841 Cardinal Alberoni observed that this beautiful building ought to be preserved in a golden étui: LADY BLESSINGTON, Idler in France, Vol. I. p. 9.

etymon, sb.: Lat. fr. Gk. ἔτυμον: the true literal meaning of a word according to its origin, the radical element.

1578 But how aptlie and trulie the same [chance and clere] may stand to make the etymon of chancellor, I leave to others to consider: HOLINSHED, Scotland. [R.] 1612 Blue hath its etymon from the High Dutch blaw: PRACHAM, On Drawing. [J.] 1634 Peace denominates Jerusalem, it is the etymon of the word: R. CLERKE, in C. H. SPURGEON'S Treas. David, Vol. VI. p. 438 (1882). 1664 nor is this sense much distant from the Etymon of the word: J. WORTHINGTON, Life, in JOE. MEDE'S Wks., p. lviii. 1665 from whence the name Spankum derives it self is not known unto the Natives; I may nevertheless venture a conjecture of the Etymon: SIR TH. HERBERT, Trav., p. 160 (1677). 1675 Home (in his Hymns) gives this Etymon of his Name: J. SMITH, Christ. Relig. Appeal, Bk. II. ch. v. § 4, p. 49. 1678 uncertainty of the Greeks concerning the Etymon of this Word, Ἀδύνα: CUDWORTH, Intell. Syst., Bk. I. ch. IV. p. 399. bef. 1783 by so much, as from a Specimen, one may imagine the whole Etymon, and Sense of the Word: R. NORTH, Examen, I. iii. 60, p. 169 (1740).

[Mr. H. D. Darbishire has upset or at least thrown considerable doubt upon the usual etymology of ἔτυμον, which connects it with Skt. satyas, = 'true', fr. Skt. root as, = 'be', akin to Gk. εἶναι, Lat. esse, = 'to be'. He proposes an affinity with Lat. vērus.]

euangelion, Late Gk. εὐαγγέλιον; euangelium, Late Lat. fr. Late Gk.: sb.: good tidings, gospel, evangel. Early Anglicised as evangelie, evangile (through Old Fr. evangile), &c.

1525 The evangelion, that joyfull tidings, is now bitterer than the old law: TYNDALE, Expos., p. 234 (1840). 1528 Whiche after Lukis evangelion/Sayde to the apostels James and John: W. ROY & JER. BARLOWE, Rede me, &c., p. 112 (1871).

eucalyptus, pl. eucalypti, sb.: Late Lat., 'well covered': name of a genus of trees, Nat. Order Myrtaceae, including the Red and Blue gum-trees of Australia and Tasmania.

1845 The bark of some of the Eucalypti falls annually, or hangs dead in long shreds which swing about with the wind: C. DARWIN, Journ. Beagle, ch. xix. p. 433. 1857 the eucalyptus boles stood out, like basal pillars: C. KINGSLEY, Two Years Ago, ch. I. p. 37 (1877). 1877 The Eucalyptus globulus, or blue gum-tree of Australia, is another and recently discovered example of the hygienic influence of vegetation: Times, Dec. 6. [St.]

Euclid: Lat. Euclides, Gk. Εὐκλείδης: the author or editor of the celebrated text-book on elementary geometry compiled about B.C. 300; hence, any edition of the said text-book; elementary geometry, or geometry treated more or less on Euclid's system, and confined to the study of plane angles and figures contained or bounded by straight lines or circles (or parts of circles), and of solid angles and figures bounded by planes.

[abt. 1886 The lord, the lady, and ech man, sauf the frere | Sayde that Jankyn spak in this matiere | As well as Euclide: CHAUCER, C. T., Sompnours Tale, 589.] bef. 1658 Yet throw your Euclid by, and only look | To th' Propositions of your living Book, | And you'll conclude Truth doth more clearly lie | There, than in th' Maxims of Philosophy: J. CLEVELAND, Wks., p. 352 (1687).

eucrasia, εὐκρασία, Gk.; eucrasie, eucrasy, Eng. fr. Gk.: sb.: lit. 'good mixture': a well-constituted temperament (of mind or body).

1669 But the other having a ruddy vigorous and perfect constitution and enjoying a compleat entire Eucrasie delights in no food but of good nouriture: SIR K. DIGBY, Observ. Relig. Med., p. 342. 1671 This likeness or conformity to God is an eucrasia, a perfect temperament: JOHN HOWE, Wks., p. 211/2 (1871). 1692 the soul in the Greek had its eucrasia, its perfect beauty and glory: WATSON, Body of Div., p. 738 (1858).

eudaemon, sb.: Late Lat. fr. Gk. εὐδαίμων (adj.), = 'having a good demon', 'fortunate', 'blessed': Astrol.: the eleventh House of an astrological figure. In the sense of a 'good angel, spirit, or genius', the term is a mistake for agathodaemon (q. v.).

1696 Eudemon, the Good Genius; by which Name the first House of a Celestial Figure is called, by reason of its good and perpetual Significations:

PHILLIPS, World of Words. 1834-47 The simple appendage of a tail will cacodemise the Eudemon: SOUTHEY, Doctor. [Davies]

euforbie, euforbio, euforbium. See euphorbium.

euge, eugê, interj.: Lat. fr. Gk. εὖγε: well done!, bravo!. Also as sb. an expression of praise.

1635 Unto whom shall that Euge be given at that great Day, but the doer: S. WARD, Sermons, p. 577. bef. 1660 The musick that Pythagoras talks of in the orbs, was that of the minstrels which our Saviour mentions at the return of that prodigal, to solemnize the euges, the passionate welcomes of heaven poured out on penitents: HAMMOND, Wks., IV. 500. [T.] 1665 the Caddi enrolls their names, the hour, day, month, and year of Nuptial; and with an Euge dismisses them: SIR TH. HERBERT, Trav., p. 308 (1677). 1809 This small still voice (which comes to all) escaped Mr. Hayley's notice, perhaps amidst the euge's of his flatterers: Quarterly Rev., Vol. II. p. 442.

eulogium, sb.: Late Lat. fr. Gk. εὐλογία, = 'praise': an expression of praise, a panegyric. Perhaps the form is affected by elogium (q. v.).

1621 all those, of whom we read such hyperbolic eulogiums: R. BURTON, Anat. Mel. To Reader, p. 28 (1827). bef. 1673 Wisdom giveth us the like eulogium of the power of God in this: J. CARVY, quoted in C. H. SPURGEON'S Treas. David, Vol. V. p. 20 (1878). 1712 yet shall I not accompany those Writings with Eulogiums, but leave them to speak for themselves: Spectator, No. 461, Aug. 10, p. 659/2 (Morley). 1728 the best repeated Eulogiums on that Theme, are but Intrusions on your Majesty's Pleasure of secretly deserving them: CIBBER, Vanbrugh's Prov. Husb., Ded., Wks., Vol. II. p. 230 (1776). 1748 This eulogium on my native country: SMOLLETT, Rad. Rand., ch. xiv. Wks., Vol. I. p. 79 (1817). 1771 His eulogium was interrupted by the arrival of the old duke of N—: Humph. Cl., p. 37/2 (1882). 1818 the eulogium I ventured to pass on Milton was wholly confined to his poetry: LADY MORGAN, Fl. MacCarthy, Vol. II. ch. II. p. 111 (1819). 1837 The quality of the lunch fully justified the eulogium which Bob had pronounced, and very great justice was done to it: DICKENS, Pickwick, ch. xlix. p. 536. 1864 he had prepared a flaming eulogium of your work: THACKERAY, Newcomes, Vol. I. ch. xxii. p. 244 (1879).

euōnymos, euōnymus, sb.: Lat. fr. Gk. εὐώνυμος, = 'well-named' (shrub): name of a genus of trees, Nat. Order Celastraceae, commonly called 'spindle-tree'. The Euonymus japonica, a variegated shrub, is also called 'Chinese-box'; Euonymos Europaea is also called 'dogwood'.

1767 deciduous flowering shrubs...such as...candleberry, myrtle, dogwood, or euonymus: J. ABERCROMBIE, Ev. Man own Gardener, p. 180 (1803). 1785 The euonymus, of which the best skewers are made, is called prickwood: J. MONCK MASON, Notes Shaks. [T.]

euphōnium, sb.: Mod. Lat., coined fr. Gk. εὐφώνιος, = 'sweet sounding': a brass musical instrument having the lowest register of the saxhorn group.

euphorbia, euphorbia, sb.: Lat. fr. Gk. εὐφώβιον: name of a genus of plants, typical of the Nat. Order Euphorbiaceae, or Spurge, spurge; also the acrid resinous drug obtained from various species, formerly used as an emetic and purgative, in this sense the form euphorbium only being used. Early Anglicised as euforbie.

1525 than make hym to nese with peper / & euforbio: Tr. Jerome of Brunswick's Surgery, sig. R. iiii v/1. 1526 [See aristolochia]. bef. 1534 [See alum de plumo]. 1540 then take an ounce of Wax, and a dram of Euphorbium, the which Euphorbium yee shall beate in a mortar with v. or vi. droppes of Oyle: RAVNALD, Birth Man, Bk. III. ch. III. p. 183 (1613). 1599 This oyle of Euphorbio: A. M., Tr. Gabelhouer's Bk. Physicke, p. 4/1. 1599 Euphorbium, from Barbaria: R. HAKLUYT, Voyages, Vol. II. i. p. 277. 1600 Euphorbium is the iuice or gumme of a certaine herbe growing like the head of a wilde thistle, betwene the branches whereof grow certain fruits: JOHN PORV, Tr. Leo's Hist. Afr., p. 355. 1603 And freng'd about with sprigs of Scammonie, | And of Euphorbium, forged cunningly: J. SYLVESTER, Tr. Du Bartas, Magnif., p. 67 (1608). 1607 Take of Euforbium beaten into fine powder, three ounces: TOPSELL, Four-f. Beasts, p. 373. 1627 Euphorbium also hath a Milke, though not very white, which is of a great Acrimony: BACON, Nat. Hist., Cent. vii. § 639. 1641 of Euphorbium powdered a scruple: JOHN FRENCH, Art Distill., Bk. IV. p. 87 (1651). 1767 the tenderer sorts of euphorbiums, cereuses, opuntias, and torch-thistle, &c., would be greatly forwarded in rooting...by aid of a bark-bed: J. ABERCROMBIE, Ev. Man own Gardener, p. 382 (1803). 1788 The sija...I imagine, from the milk of it, that it is an euphorbia: SIR W. JONES, Letters, Vol. II. No. CXXXV. p. 122 (1821). 1796 The seed-vessels of a species of Euphorbia, pulverized, were used for poisoning wolves: Tr. Thunberg's C. of Good Hope, Finkerton, Vol. xvi. p. 17 (1814).

Euphrosynê: Lat. fr. Gk. Εὐφροσύνη: name of one of the Graces, the three presiding deities of mirth and cheerfulness.

1637 thou Goddess fair and free, | In Heav'n yclep'd Euphrosyne: MILTON, L. Allegro, 12.

Euraquilo, Euroaquilo: Late Lat.: a north-north-east wind that causes dangerous spring storms in the Levant, a Levanter. See Euroclydon.

1861 there beat down from it a tempestuous wind, which is called Euraquilo: Bible (R.V.), Acts, xxvii. 14.

eurêka (heurêka would be correct, but would now be pedantic), εὕρηκα, 1st pers. sing. perf. act. of Gk. εὕρισκειν, = 'to discover': 'I have discovered' (it), said to have been the exclamation of Archimedes, the philosopher of Syracuse, when he discovered the principle of specific gravity, and how thereby to detect the amount of alloy in the crown of the tyrant Hiero; applied attributively to sundry modern articles of trade, such as a particular pattern of shirt much advertised some years ago.

1570 For this, may I (with joy) say, EYPHKA, EYPHKA, EYPHKA: J. DEX, Pref. Billingsley's Euclid, sig. c ij ro. 1598 he found it out, and presently forgetting himself, leaped forth naked as he was, crying euphka I have found it: R. HAYDOCKE, Tr. Lomatius, To Reader, sig. ¶ iij ro. 1603 he ran forth suddenly out of the baine, as if he had beene frantike, or inspired with some fanatically spirit, crying out; Heureka, Heureka, that is to say, I have found it, I have found it: HOLLAND, Tr. Plut. Mor., p. 590. 1607 Hay euphka, euphka, I haue it (the answer to a riddle): A. BREWER, Lingua, iii. 6, sig. G 2 ro. 1658 Now a way is invented how for all money, be it never so small, we can tell presently, and we want not many instruments, that we may cry, We have over-founded Uperewreka, Uperewreka, we have gone beyond Archimedes his Eureka: Tr. J. Baptisti Porta's Nat. Mag., Bk. xviii. ch. viii. p. 384. 1662 Like a better Archimedes, the issue of all his Enquiries was an euphka, an euphka, the Off-spring of his Brain without the Sweat of his Brow: SOUTH, Serms., Vol. I. p. 53 (1727). 1665 yea after we have triumph'd in a supposed Euphka: a new-sprung difficulty matts our Ovations: GLANVILLE, Scaphis, ch. ix. p. 59 (1885). 1674 to sing Mattins and Evensong to my own euphka: N. FAIRFAX, Bull and Selo, p. 2. 1678 welcoms these discoveries with a thankful euphka: J. SMITH, Christ. Relig. Appeal, Bk. ii. ch. ii. § 4, p. 12. 1682 Cries euphka, the mighty secret's found: DRYDEN, Rel. Lark, 43. 1742 Adams then snapping his fingers, returned overjoyed to his companions, crying out, 'Heureka, Heureka': FIELDING, Jos. Andrews, ii. xiv. Wks., Vol. v. p. 100 (1800). 1787 He cries out Euphka with all the ecstasy of Archimedes: Genl. Mag., 1059/2. 1818 now we clap! Our hands, and cry "Eureka!" it is clear: BYRON, Child Harold, iv. lxxxii. 1826 he claps his hands, cries euphka! and is dubbed "illustrious" on the spot: LORD BRACONSFIELD, Viv. Grey, Bk. vii. ch. iii. p. 397 (1881). 1843 It is (if he will pardon me the expression) his eureka: THACKERAY, Misc. Essays, p. 37 (1885). 1860 my Eureka shirt will fit you to a nicety: Once a Week, June 30, p. 10/1.

euripus, sb.: Lat. fr. Gk. εὐρίπος, a strait, a channel; esp. Euripus, the name of the strait between Boeotia and Euboea, in which the current, according to the Ancients, changed seven times a day; the canal in a Roman hippodrome between the spectators and the arena; also, metaph. dangerous fluctuations of affairs, once at least, a remarkable feat of inhaling and after an interval exhaling (smoke). Sometimes Anglicised as curipe.

1599 the Cuban ebollion, Euripus, and Whiffe: B. JONSON, Ev. Man out of his Hum., iii. 3, Wks., p. 122 (1616). 1621 a sea full of shelves and rocks, sands, gulfs, Euripes and contrary tides: R. BURTON, Anat. Mel., Pt. 3, Sec. 4, Mem. 1, Subs. 1, Vol. II. p. 480 (1827). 1765 the euripus, or canal, made by order of Julius Caesar to contain crocodiles: SMOLLETT, France & Italy, xxxii. Wks., Vol. v. p. 499 (1817). 1826 And shall we be made to suffer shipwreck, we of the South I mean, in steering our bark through this Euripus, by the madness of our pilot and our own folly: Congress. Debates, Vol. II. Pt. I. p. 130. 1827 the terrible consequences of Bankruptcy... would... deter many from embarking in commerce, on this sea of uncertainties, this Eubean tide, this Euripus, on which so many are stranded, or overwhelmed and lost: ib., Vol. III. p. 170.

Euroclydon: Gk. Εὐροκλύδων, 'having broad waves': name given to the north-north-east Levanter in Acts, xxvii. 14 (A. V.). See Euraquilo.

bef. 1670 And this was joynd with too much Fire in the passion of his Anger, in which Mood indeed, which is strange, he would reason excellently, and continue it in the very Euro-clydon of his Choler: J. HACKET, Abp. Williams, Pt. II. 64, p. 63 (1693).

Europa: Lat.: name of the western division of the great continent of the Eastern Hemisphere, so called after the mythical daughter of the Phœnician king, Agenor. Anglicised as Europe. Hence, European, adj. and sb.
